"And what state can that mind be in that can keep such a house? How destitute of all the finer feelings of humanity—to speak of religion would be nonsense. Where is love for his country and his kind? Can patriotism inhabit such a bosom? Impossible. Can such a man be a reformer—a regenerator of society—and keep a house and sell an article to degrade, dehumanize, and enslave his fellow man, soul and body, hand and foot? Incredible. How much of

"And is it possible that the spirit dealer can commend his traffic to God in prayer? Could he lay his hand on his heart, and enter the divine presence, and crave God to bless his efforts? It cannot be. His blood would run cool, his soul would freeze in the endeavor, his smitten conscience could not bear the piercing glance of God; he can only carry on his trade by forgetting elernity, trampling on the sacred dictates of conscience, and escaping from thoughts of future death and judgment. Infinitely better for a man to beg his bread from door to door, than occupy such a position. In this case he might be an heir of heaven—but who can recognize the selling whisky and elernal glory?" LOWERPRICES. Office No. 308 Walnut Street. 1 $177,021... Assirs $276,478 41.—Invested a dortgage on improved City Property, worth To aid our readers in forming a correct ides of the battle of Magenta, which will be talked of thought of, and written of langer than any of us will live, as the first collision on a grand scale of the armies of France high Justica, in the way whose uproar is now Alling the world, we have prepared a simple diagram is which the principal localities of the country surrounding the field of battle are represented. For the country trees, and its plottresque cities; and for plotteres of the splendors and terrors of war, we must refer to the abundant correspondeace from the scene of hostillities, of which a liberal quantity has appeared in our columns; and for the general geography of the Seat of War we refer to any of the cheap maps, which are plenty as newspapers. But here is our diagram, by the assistance of which we hope with few worlds to make the battle of Magenta clearly intelligible.

To aid our readers of Magenta, which we head with a colly and the design of the seat of war. Mr. Ernest has been a clitten of the United States for thirty years. He has served in our volunteer military forces, and has, on several occasions, seen active service in quelling riots. He now holds a commission as licit. Concel in Ohio Volunteer Militia, and is an excellent officer and honorable citizen, widely known and respected. He proceeded to Wushington to have his passports made out, taking letters to the State Department, stating is character and position, from the Hono. William S. Groesbeck, and other distinguished gentleme. He obtained interviews with Gen. Cass, and was coolly told that it would be prudent for him to stay at home, as the Covernment would not undertake to guaranty his protection as a citizen of the United States, and that he might be impressed into the French army.

He has in consequence given up his design of visiting Europe, and returned to this city, very naturally impressed that he had been mistaken in believing that he would be entitled to respect anywhere on the globe as a citizen of the Number of the Seat To aid our readers in forming a correct idea of the battle of Magenta, which will be talked of AMES HOLMES & CO., Pork Packer Canrobert's corps was struggling with great diffi-culty along the road from Novaro to Buffalora. The King of Sardinia and his army had also met Canrobert's corps was struggling with great difficulty along the road from Novaro to Buffalora. The King of Sardinis and his army had also met with many embarrassments, said were, with the exception of a single division, far behind McMahon in the passage of the river at Turbigo, and were unable to come into action in time to share the glory of the battle. MoMahon endeavored to advance in two columns, one proceeding directly down the river, the other advancing toward Magenta. But he found the Austrians in such force that they were about to separate those olumns by their masses, and fell back in order to rounite them; and then, instead of proceeding down the river to Buffalora, he moved on to Magenta arriving there opportunely, struck the great blow of the day. It was his retrograted movement for the sake of strengthening his columns that caused the cossation of firing that the Emperor could not understand, and the final march upon Magenta instead of Buffalora that occasioned still further delay. The Emperor and his guards therefore, instead of being immediately supported by McMahon marching down the river on the Austrians side, and the main body of the army under Canrobert, coming up on the line of general advance, was left to contend with the masses of the Austrian grand army at the Buffalora bridge bead, for four hours. Here however, the narrowness of the roads had impeded the advance of Canrobert, prevented the Austrians from using their superior numbers with effect. At length McMahon charged Magenta with irrecistable impetuosity, and Canrobert, prevented upon the Austrians with forty pieces of the French rifled artillery planted on the Railway embankment. The battle lasted until after eight o'clock at night, when the Austrians with forty pieces of the French rifled artillery planted on the Railway embankment.
