DAILY PIUSBURGH GAZDTED. VOLUME LXXII---NUMBER 183 PITTSBURGH, TUESDAY MORNING, JULY 12, 1859. ESTABLISHED IN 1786. ANOTHER OLD WHIG SOM.—The latest contribution to Mr. Hiram Ketchum's Museum of Whig Literature is from the pen of the Hon. W. C. Rives of Virginia. He is, as a matter of course, opposed to the Slavery agitation, and recommends that public attention should be turned to "questions of a more general and pervading character." Such, for example, as the "great ond of binding together in fraternal union the various sections of the Republic." If, however, we may judge of the interest which public questions excite by the manner of their discussion, it would, we think, be difficult for Mr. Rives to point out one of a more "pervading character" than this toplo which he advises his countrymen to drop. Not only at the North, but in his own section of the Union, is Slavery in some of its aspects the theme of constant and eager remark. If he can persuade the people to let it alone in the future, he will prove himself a very potent political conjuror. When he says that slavery has no proper connection with national politics, he expresses what might he theoretically true if it did not unfortu-Insutance. Insurance, Monongahela Insurance Company. To do them justice, they do not seem to have been besten as they were besten by poleon or Morsan, but they have been dy do off aller sack encounter, leaving the field of the enemy, and to the enemy, and to the enemy, and to the first agents to the fort age of Peschiera and Manta. All that they had established with such care and tioll and cost during 40 years has been abandoned in a week. Placenza, which has always been a main grievance with the Italians, and the fortifications of which threatened to delay indefinitely the advance of an invading army, was left in such haste that the Allies have not only captured a vast number of guns, but provisions and materials of war sufficient to give no small help to their army. Not only has this great fortified place and Pavia, also a place of note, been abandoned, but some half doren positions where a battle might well have been fought, have been Maris. We would merely ask whether the position of the present time is the same as that of Easter Sunday. How, then can Germany expect that the hand on the clock of time can be put back so as to allow Austria the same chance as she possessed before her Generals had given proof of inespacity, and her Armies of weakness? After all, when nations appeal to war, they must abide by it, and it is quite, imposible that Austria, who has done her part in tearing the Treaties of 1815, can now claim, under thoir sanction, what she has lost by arms, How can Austrian troops again garrison Mina, except after some important victory? How can an army which his so besieged in fortresses at the extremity of Lombardy claim to return to territory out of which it has been driven, except by showing itself superior to the enemy who has for the prepent worned it? If Germany had made these propositions to France when the Austrians were on the Ticino, then there would have been some reason for this sould be a superior that Louis Na-SUNDRIES—100 bus. France when the Austrians were on the Ticino, then there would have been some reason for this warlike attilude; but to expect that Louis Napoleon can, after two great victories, and after driving his enemy some two hundred miles before him, acquiesce in the conditions which were acceptable before the peace, is most vain. He would ask, first, why Germany supports Austria in Italy, at all; and, secondly, how it is that such a policy having been adopted, the propositions of Prussiawere not made while there was still a chance of their acceptance.
