By the Canada's Mails.

LONDON, Friday, July 1, 1859.—The great battle on the Mincio, called by the French the battle of Solferino and by the Austrians the battle of Volta, has again confirmed my often expressed views that Austria cannot hold her own against France; and that all the halo of invincibility and perfect organization surrounding old Radetzky's army was a fictitious invention of the London Times correspondent in his corpsin 1848-9. The Austrians retired across the Mincio to entice the Allies to the strategic position of Lonato and Castiglione, so well studied by the Austrians. The manœuver succeeded; the Austrians at once recrossed the river, and attacked their enemy in the position they had desired them to be and though there was no Gyulai at the head of their army, they were once more signally defeated. The Austrian papers complain that it was done in defiance of the principle of strategy, the French army having changed their front during the battle; but the public now laugh at such excuses, and now perceive that Austria does not deserve to be a great power, since she is unable to back her great pretensions. As to the spirit of her leaders, I subjoin here a translation of Gen. Urban's proclamation at Verona on the 22d June, as it appeared in the semi official Od Deutsche Post of Vienna of June 23:

"The state of siege of the fortress of Verona declared on the 30th of April, and the subsequent proclamations have not been observed according to their importance. I declare, therefore, to all the inhabitants of the territory of the fortress intrusted to me by his Majesty, the Emperor Francis Joseph, that I shall see the laws of the state of siege most severely obeyed by everybody. I do not know any distinction of person. In order that the inhabitants may know with whom they have to deal, I declare that everybody may vent me as an honest Austrian, and that I do not trust any of the Italians.

Charles Baron Urban, Field Marshal Lieutenant, Commander of the fortress and town, knows by the barbarous execution of a family of peasants near Varese, and by the flogging of an old respected Professor in the same town, fights with a halter round his neck; this is the reason why the command of Verona was entrusted to him: he is certain not to surrender.

The French are crossing the Mincio at leisure, no Austrian stands in their way, and the headquarters of the Emperor are already at Lonato. A look at the map will show you that the Austrians have thus given up their line of railway communication between Mantua and Verona, and most probably have withdrawn to the Adige. From an amateur just returned from the Austrian army, I hear that the fortifications of Verona are not complete, and that the last battle was fought to give the engineers a respite of a fortnight for the completion of the earthworks. As to Peschiera, it cannot stand a siege of more than a fortnight. Thus the famous quadrilateral may soon be reduced to two points, without any communication between them—Verona and Mantua—since even the Austrians admit that Legnano is not fit to resist any regular attack. The return of the Emperor Francis Joseph is explained by the threatening aspect of the Province, and even of Vienna. The Cabinet of Berlin and that of St. James continue to advise a complete change of administration, especially in Hungary. Still, the Emperor of Austria, stubborn and ill-natured, clings to his centralising, Ultramontaine policy; to his Minister Bach; to his old de camp, Grunne, and to his confessor and late tutor, Cardinal Rauscher.

Kossuth arrived at Genoa on the 22d, and went on the 23d to Turin. The Italians greeted him everywhere most enthusiastically, since they regard his presence as a new pledge that Napoleon does not wish to interfere with their liberties. He had a long interview with Cavour on the day of the battle, and left the capital on the following day to see the King of Sardinia and the Emperor Napoleon. The question of the invasion of Hungary was therefore to be settled within the next week. It seems that the necessity of carrying the war into Hungary, in order to force Austria into peace, is already felt at headquarters, especially since Prussia's movements have assumed a more determined character, and give hope to Austria that if she will only hold out for a while, all Germany will rush to her rescue. Napoleon is preparing for that eventuality, too, certain that should Prussia really enter into the war, all France would rise at his word. A German invasion is just the thing which would give stability to the new Dynasty.

MORE ABOUT THE BATTLE.—The special correspondent of the London Star writes from Castiglione, on the 24th of June:

"The day succeeding my arrival at Montechiaro headquarters advanced to Castiglione, a brigade of guards acting as the extreme outpost of the 2d line, no apparent change in the previous disposition of the troops having been effected. About 3 o'clock on the morning of the 24th, Gen. Mc'Mahon's corps advanced rapidly through the town, and debouching upon the plain to the left of the Mantua road, immediately opened fire upon the Austrian line, at long range, with two batteries of artillery of the line. The cannonade was maintained at slow intervals between each gun, and was fully responded to on the part of the Austrians. At 6½ a dense cloud of dust and smoke was seen rapidly sweeping across the plain from the direction of Volta. It was first believed to be a division of Canrobert's but was soon discovered to be an Austrian body of cavalry with horse artillery, who immediately took up a position in the plain, supported by cavalry, and opened a tremendous fire upon McMahon's division, who soon found himself hotly engaged with the enemy. In the mean time, Baraguay d' Hillier's corps, who, by a rapid detour, had succeeded in advancing within three miles of Lonato, seeing McMahon so hotly pressed, and judging from the movements of the enemy that dispositions were being made to outflank him, moved about and bearing down in an oblique line upon the enemy's centre, attacked them at once on the heights. The Austrians were, however, in immense strength on the very front of McMahon's columns, and Gen. Niel's division was ordered to take a position in the interval that still existed; Baraguay d' Hilliers notwithstanding the determined valor of his troops, finding it impossible to head against the enemy. At this moment Gen. Meurice, with the whole of the Imperial Guard arrived on the the field from Castiglione, and immediately took part with the artillery of the Guard in the interval still existing between Niel and McMahon's corps. The artillery at once unlimbered, and maintained a terrific cannonade for nearly four hours at half-rifle shot range, during which they suffered immense loss, nearly every officer and man of the artillery engaged being put hors de combat. The battle was now general, and raged with unwearying obstinacy until 2 o'clock, when Baraguay d' Hilliers, having by this dislodged the centre of the enemy from their position, effected a junction with Niel's corps, and bearing down upon the left flank of the troops still engaged, and by this time overwhelming Mc. Mahon's corps, compelled them to retire—a movement that soon became apparent throughout the line." In this battle the particulars of which I have attempted to give, the most heroic courage and devotion were displayed on either side, and Devaux and his cavalry have covered themselves with glory. The 3d Chasseurs and the regiment of Turcos performed some most brilliant charges—backing with the bayonet dense masses of infantry, and rallying under the very muzzles of their muskets."

BENEFICIAL EFFECTS OF THE FROST.—An observant farmer in Ferry county states that since the late frosts, instead of the myriads of grasshoppers usually abounding at this season of the year, scarcely one of the "varmints" is to be found on his or any of his neighbors' farms. He also states that the caterpillars have been nearly destroyed, the nests having generally turned black. An examination of some of them has convinced him that these enemies of the fruit trees were frozen by the late frosts.

THE NEXT PHASE OF THE WAR.—Peschiera is invested. The Sardinians have established their camp before it, and begun the operations of a regular siege.

It seems probable that the war is now to change its character. It will no longer consist of successive field conflicts in which one army is steadily and victoriously advancing, and the other sullenly falling back. The Austrians have now reached their stronghold—the famous quadrilateral of fortified towns—where they can stand obstinately upon the defensive. It was
