Curious Chronicle of the Last Four Days of the War.

We give below a chronological resume of the events immediately preceding the armistice between the Allied armies of Italy and the Austrian troops. Without a doubt a temporary suspension of hostilities had been determined upon by the Emperor of the French directly after the decisive victory of Solferino, but the careful way in which he collected and mastered the details of his situation is quite in accordance with our previous estimates of his character. Prudent in the field, and impenetrable in the Cabinet, it is quite evident that the Emperor of the French knows when to withhold his hand as well as when to strike a blow. It will be seen too, that he uses the telegraph, like a clever journalist, both for the collection and the dissemination of information.

1.—On the 24 of July, Marshal Niel, who commanded the advanced posts of the French army, sent a special messenger to the Emperor's headquarters at Valleggio, stating that three hundred thousand Austrians were in the Adige, and that the head of their army—which had been two and a half miles distant from him since Solferino—was advancing towards him, and that he expected to be attacked on the morning (next) of 3d of July. Before the messenger returned with Napoleon's reply Niel evacuated Villafranca and fell back on the main body of the French army. Half an hour after he left Villafranca the Austrians arrived and established themselves there, dispossessing such French officers as had remained after Niel, from their billets, and permitting them to go away. On the same day (2) Napoleon ordered Marshal Vaillant to make a reconoissance of the Austrian positions, which he did. The Marshal returned to Vallegio at night, and had an interview with the Emperor, who ordered his field charger to be ready at his door next (3) morning. The Austrians however made no attack, and the different divisions of both armies remained undisturbed.

2.—On the 4th of July Prince Napoleon telegraphed to Paris that he "found two hundred and fifty thousand Austrians in line on the Adige," and seemed to attach much importance to the fact.

3.—On the 4th of July the Prince Regent of Prussia signed the order for the Federal troops of occupation to march on the Rhine, and notified the commanders of the different corps of the fact from Berlin. The order to march was not issued, but held over for a few days.

4.—On the same day (4th of July) General Fleury, of the French army, arrived at Verona, the head quarters of the Emperor of Austria and had a long interview with his Majesty. It was at first reported in the Austrian camp that his mission related to a proposal for an exchange of prisoners, but it was ascertained there the same evening that it had reference to an armistice which would be accepted.

5.—On the 5th of July Lord Lyndhurst made a most exciting speech in the House of Lords on the National defenses of England, in which he alluded in a very pointed manner to the war attitude of France, both as regarded Italy, and the probability that Napoleon would be forced to attempt an invasion of England by his troops, flushed with triumph over the Austrians. As the Emperor has a full resume of such addresses always sent him by telegraph, it is probable that Lord Lyndhurst's remarks reached him on the afternoon of July the 6th.

6.—It was telegraphed from Berne to Vallegio on the 6th of July: "All the Austrian troops have left Windschau, and are now concentrated on the Stelvio Pass, where a conflict is expected to-morrow" (7th)

7.—The federal Diet of Germany met at Frankfort-on-the-Main on the 7th of July, when Austria proposed that the whole federal contingents should be mobilized, and that the Prince Regent of Prussia should be requested to assume the command in chief of it. The Prince Regent it is said, was most anxious for this honor, and if he got the command would soon issue his order to march]

VALLEGIO, July 9, 1859.

The Emperor to the Empress:

An armistice has been agreed on between the Emperor of Austria and myself. Commissioners have been appointed for the arrangement of its particulars and duration.

9.—The Paris Moniteur, of July, 9, gave the following:

The armistice was signed at Villafranca on the 8th inst., between Marshal Vaillant and Baron Hess. Its term is fixed for the 10th of August.

10.—A treaty of peace between France and Austria was signed July 11, 1859.

The Count Cavour.—Bitter almost beyond expression was the feeling of disappointment and the recoil of wounded honor that overwhelmed Count Cavour, on leaving the audience with Napoleon which preceded his resignation of power. Whatever doubts may have before been indulged in, in regard to the purity of Cavour's intentions, none can remain on them now. He has shown that his devotion to the Italian national cause is a heartfelt and life long devotion, and one which he cannot compromise by seeming to assent to conditions of peace which leave the old wrongs unremoved and unavenged. At Napoleon's own advice and counsel, and with his fullest knowledge and concurrence, Count Cavour had from the onset, held out to the troubled Italians the hope of attaining constitutional governments, without revolution. At the Congress of 1856, Cavour demanded consideration for the abused people of other States, and stated to the representatives of other governments that the liberal State of Sardinia held revolution in check by sustaining hope of reform, and that the loss of such a government to Italy would be the signal of almost universal anarchy and revolution.

The Hapsburgs of more than one nation persisted in paying no heed to the Italian statesmen, not only then, but until the great war drama opened. At length they saw and admitted the great truth, but just as it was upon the point of fulfillment, Cavour's own ally and counsellor betrays and dishonors him in the peace which seals the duchies over to Austrian rule hereafter, as heretofore.

The keenest sympathies of the world will be given to the "betrayed Sardinian statesman. If the Archdukes undertake to punish those whom the love and the hope of liberty have compromised in these recent events, it is scarcely credible that the civilized world will permit it to be done. If the reactionists who have sympathized as in 1848, and pursue all who have sympathized with the tide of liberal events which has swept over Italy, and inspired Napoleon's proclamation at Magenta as the chief among its indications; there will be a power in public opinion invoked which may prove troublesome to despots, unless they recognize and defer to it. For the present we will not believe that such a reaction is possible, but the resignation of Cavour, and his evident keen suffering under the complications and humiliations resulting from the ill advised treaty of peace, give a discouraging tone to those who were recently the most sanguine, and throw a heavy shadow over the future.—*Phil. A Simple Mode of Destroying Roaches.—As these pests are quite numerous at this season of the year, housekeepers who are annoyed by them will doubtless be induced to try the following plan for getting rid of them. It is furnished by a correspondent of the Knoxville Whig, and is a very simple if as effective as alleged:

These vermin are easily destroyed, simply by cutting up green cucumbers at night and placing them about where the roaches commit depredations. What is cut off from the cucumbers in preparing them for the table answers the purpose as well, and three applications will destroy all the roaches in the house. Remove the decayed cucumbers in the morning and renew them at night."

Love and Politics.—During the Fremont campaign, our Democratic friends were avere on us Republicans, because a certain zealous church in Kent county, had dismissed from its communion a member who avowed his determination to vote for James Buchanan for President. Certainly that church would now stand vindicated before the country. But we now have a case of partisan zeal which fairly equals the above. A staunch old Dred Scott Lockfoco, of Eaton county, as we learn from the Republican, has a sensible daughter, who has for some time been courted by a Republican lover, and as the upshot of it, had concluded to marry. This consummation the paternal Democrat decidedly opposed. Being questioned, he freely avowed that his great objection to the daughter's lover was that he was a "Black Republican." But love laughs at impediments. The mutual attentions of the young people continued. A few days since the daughter was riding out in a carriage in company with her father, when the proposed marriage came up, and he asked her if she intended to persist in her determination of marrying the Republican youth. She replied that they intended to get married this coming Fall, when he requested her to get out of the carriage, and demanded her bonnet and shawl. She complied with both requests, and found lodgings at a neighbor's house. The young man learning how matters stood, was soon on hand, and, like a gallant lover soon provided for the discarded daughter a home and husband. We should not be surprised to hear that the young couple brought old Pater familias around all right, and that he voted for the Republican candidate in 1860.

Gov. Wise Defining His Position.—The public have been favored with a side column letter from Governor Wise, of Virginia, in reply to certain questions addressed to him by a number of his fellow citizens, of the Old Dominion, who flatteringly allude to his position as a candidate for the Presidency. The two main questions upon which Mr. Wise spreads himself, are the case of partisan zeal which fairly equals the protection due to naturalized citizens returning to the country of their birth; the re-opening of the slave trade, and the enactment by Congress of a Slave Code for the Territories.
