MASURING THE WELLS CLOS.—In the palmy Masuring the Western and Central New York, the application of active man practiced. The opinion widely prevalled that such a course was injurious, by stimulating a heavy growth of straw Arth the expense of the formar, increasing the liability to lodge, and familing grain. In some instances no doubt, high manuring has been followed by such results, but in many more, large crops of wheat have rewarded in the application. We took occasion some eight years ago, to urge the subject upon the attention of our brother farmers, and the current of events infinenaing the wheat crop during that time, has brought if far more forcibly upon their attention.

We throw away our seed and labor, now-re-WEDNESDAY MORNING, AUG., 8, 1850. it far more forcibly upon their attention.

We throw away our seed and labor, now-days, in sowing any but rich, warm, quick soils to wheat. We must get a large growth of healthy early maturing plants, or the wheat midge will destroy the whole product. This we have urged in a former article, and will revert more strictly to the subject indicated in our heading.

Of all grains, says chemicle analysis, whoat has in it more nitrogeneous substances than any other. Fifteen per cent of the sort are the substance any other. Strice in our heading any other. Of all grains, says chemicle analysis, wheat has in it more nitrogeneous substances than has in it more nitrogeneous substances than any other. Fifteen per cent. of the organic matter of the grain of wheat belongs to this matter of the grain of wheat belongs to this class. Although the straw may grow luxuring the grain cannot he formed without it is riched, the grain cannot he formed without it will be formation of the kernels," says a writer on this subject, "ordinary soils, with rain, dow, and air, can farnish: and grow the wheat plant. But when it comes to the fruiting part, the plant has to sack in the soil for materials out of which to fabricate its seed. It is necessary, therefore, that there be in such soil what we farmers call nutritive or putressel wheat plants we farmers call nutritive or putressel where the soil what we farmers call nutritive or putressel where the soil what we farmers call nutritive or putressel where the soil of the soil o gen can be formed." This is furnished in barn-yard manure, and other fertilizers of like character. These in a partially decomposed state, (and hence furnishing almost immedi-ately antiment for the crop.) we would apply to favorable soils before sowing them with state, (and hence furnishing almost immediately nutriment for the crop.) we would apply to favorable soils before sowing them with wheat.

Many farmers have been in the habit of applying their stock of yard manure in a green or long state in the spring, to land intended for corn; reserving little or none for composting, or for application to the wheat crop. But this practice is becoming less general, and we now find frequently; those who prefer keeping the manure in the yard until well decomposed, and placing it in heaps for use the next ceasuring plying it also upon winter grain, if the source is usually very successful. Though land heavily manured for corn, will produce good crops of wheat and barley following, it is seldom that the area which may be so manured and devoted, embraces half the extent we desire for growing grain, which would produce it if enriched sufficiently. Hence we see that we need more manure, as well as to Wednesday.

duce it if enriched sufficiently. Hence we see that we need more manure, as well as to the study the most effective application of the same.

More manure may be had by composting that obtained from our farm stock with vegotable mould—the muck of swamps and marsh-ce—the turf and wash roads—the scrapings of ponds and ditches. We have doubled the amount and value of our yard manure by mixing it with muck from the swamp, and fermenting the same together in heaps loosely laid up and properly moistened. This was used at the rate of twelve loads per acre on land sown in wheatlast autumn, being merely gang-plowed in before sowing. A small plot not dressed, shows a very warked different seeds.

nured portion, and the wheat will be of little if of any value.

We hope the lesson of the past few years will not be lost on those who begin, after all to think the wheat midge less the enemy of the farmer than his own improvident course in cropping with this grain. If it shall induce us to a better enriching and cultivation of the soil, and a more careful study of the nature statements of our different crops, it will dehands of our different crops, it will prove to the country at large a blessing and not a curse. If it leads the mass of farmers, as it has many of them, to employ every available means of increasing the quantity and quality of the manure made upon their farms and to study attentively the most effective apmixed with the surface soil by harrowing very shallow plowing, will prove of the great-est benefit to the crop. This method is prac-ticed by the most successful wheat growers of the present day.—Country Gentleman. New Stock of Melodeons.
