except that connected with his official position and cuttively dependent upon it, and his real cor supposed political influence with the Administration. There are hundreds upon the the Administration of such possession of the terms of the property of Washington, the thresholds of which they never crossed or could cores, no matter what might be his party relations. It is eminently to the credit of this city, not with a standing all the calmany which has been heaped upon it by those who have had but ilmited means of entering its private life, that there are many families who esohew all contact with Congress, or official personnecs, except in such cases as are universally admitted, because they choose to base their social intercourse upon a higher principle, and more independent ties than those which depend upon the transitions of power. As has already been said, Mr. Sickles and his set had no access to this circle. Mr. Key, his victim, and who belonged to an old and responsible family, had the cutter generally, but his position had been impaired to some degree by such associations as those which led to his premature "taking off." Although it is said that some of the officials will recognize Sickles next winter, the portais of even that free and easy set to which everybody has had admission in the last two years, until an omission became a higher compliment than an invitation, will be, in a manner, closed against him."
