AFTER BATTLE.—Death leaves little trace behind him. After drownings, which suddenly sever the dearest ties, the murderous stream flows on as smooth as ever. The sea, which has swallowed whole ships at noon, will at evening glance and smile in the setting sun with all apparent innocence; even by the light of the carnage disappears with marvelous rapidity. At first the very next day after the battle, the contested ground may offer a terrible and affecting aspect. You will see lying among the wheat, stretched by the roadside or fallen against the trunks of trees, corpses still contorted by the agonies of death. This is the brief interval when the scene is still strewed with wagons smashed into chips, and the mutilated carcases of cavalry horses. But in three or four days it is all cleared away. A passing stranger, unenlightened by a guide, would never suspect that the fiery tempest of war had so lately torn over that verdant spot. The battle of Montebello began near Voghera. Here and there along the road a few mulberry branches have been cut off by the bullets. A circular cut on the trunk of a tree tells you that a cannon ball has flown in that direction; the corner of a wall is shattered; the plaster of a cottage has fallen off in patches; a square of glass is broken in a window, or's shutter is pierced with two or three round holes. Meanwhile the cow peaceably grazes the wayside grass, the washerwoman rinses linen—not her own, but shirts of strange fashion—at the edge of the brook; the plow-man drives his slow-paced oxen; the housewife despins her flax, her children are merrily rolling in a corner; at the door of the inn the beggar stretches out his hand, whining his accustomed nasal petition.

The energies of earth rapidly screen, beneath a luxuriant garment of emerald green, the temporary mischief caused by man. While admiring the picturesque coquetry of nature—her clumps of trees mingled with scattered buildings, her wide extended plains, whose horizon is guarded by the phantom forms of Mont Cenis, Mont Genevre, Mont Blanc and Monte Rosa, her rows of poplars fringing the Po, a breath of which starts forth from its bowery hiding place to glance in the sunshine—who could believe he was treading the theatre of war? Of the deadly struggle of Montebello scarcely a trace will soon remain.

Here and there only the wheat is trodden down over considerable spaces; the trampled corn betrays the passage of artillery; the trained vines are broken with gaps, or the stem of a young tree has snapped asunder. A gaiter, a collar, the wreck of a soldier's cap, the half hidden in the grass; sundry clods of earth, by the side of a furrow, are stained with an unusual tinge of red; you examine them more closely, they are soaked and saturated with blood. There, amid the vine leaves, wet with dew, hang the tatters of an Austrian waistcoat; its cloth is smeared in places with brick dust, which is the ready corner for the remains of a horse. And that is all, except that in the cemetery are accupie of large graves containing the bodies of the Austrians who fell in their last retreat. Patches of fresh earth in like oats the spots where sundry soldiers are laid to take their final rest. But goats and sheep bleat around as if nothing had happened, and the laughing girls fill their sacks with mulberry leaves for the rearing of silkworms, which whether in peace or war, must still be fed.—Dickens' "All the Year Round."

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN FRENCH AND AMERICAN BRANDY.—The Chester County (Pa.) Times is responsible for the following:

A gentleman of our acquaintance wished to purchase some brandy to be used in sickness, and called on an old German liquor dealer in the city of Philadelphia, when the following dialogue ensued:

"Have you any imported brandy—genuine stuff?"

"Very good prandy. Come and trink some claret punch; dat ish goot, too, ven de vedder ish hot."

"No, I thank you, I want a little brandy for a sick man."

"Come and try the punch. One vriend from Germany peen here. I see him not before, for many years. We pean trinking de punch."

"Come and tell me about the brandy, I want a little of the best in market."

The old gentleman was a little mellow—just enough to make him talkative; and the visit of his friend had so warmed his sympathies as to make him communicative.

"Now, my vriend, you vants goot prandy, and I sells you goot prandy. Dare ish some prandy I make myself, and dat ish goot. Dare ish some I bought in New York, and dat is sheap prandy. Dare ish some dat I imported from Vrance, and dat ish very goot too."

"Did you say you made that lot yourself?"

"Dat I make myself, and I warrants dat. It is made of de verra best whisky."

"Whisky! I don't want any of your infernal concoctions made of whisky and called brandy."

(Old gentleman solemnly.) "It is all made of whisky, my vriend, and dat ish de reason why de Vrench prandy is not so good as good American prandy. No prandy ish now distilled from wine any more; it ish not possible to make it sheap enough for dis market from wine, and de American people do not like do real prandy because dey are not used to it."

"Did you say that French brandy is not so good as our own manufacture? We import some brandy from France, do we not?"

"O, we import plenty of prandy to blease de rich people, but it ish not goot. In Vrance, the prandy ish made of potato whisky, and dat ish not so goot as de corn whisky what we makes into prandy here!"

THE CROP.—All over the Northwest the work of threshing the Spring crops is going on vigorously. The yield of wheat in the northern portion of Illinois is about equal to expectation; but towards the central part of the State, the heads, on account of dry weather, were not so well filled, and the yield is not so good as was anticipated. Oats and barley are a fair yield—the latter having escaped being stained by foul weather. The corn crop throughout the southern and central portions of the State looks well, and the promise is favorable; but in some of the northern counties—Winnebago, Boone and Stephenson—the want of rain has been felt. The same is true of potatoes in the northern part of the State, and the crop there will be very small. The corn crop in Iowa is good; and in fact all over the northwest, with the exception of a few counties, we hear of nothing but a large corn crop. Unless the early frost injure it, it will be the largest crop the west ever saw. The weather during the week has been moderately warm and slightly showery.—Chicago Press.

DINNER TO AARON BURR IN NASHVILLE.—The Memphis Argus says that a copy of the Petersburg (Va.) Intelligencer of 1806 has lately been brought to light. It contains the report of a dinner given in Nashville, Tennessee, to Colonel Aaron Burr, "late Vice President of the United States." General Jackson was present, and gave as a sentiment, "Millions for defence, not one cent for tribute." Colonel Burr "having retired from the room," a toast was proposed in his honor by General Overton. An order from "Andrew Jackson, Major of the Second Division," is published, reciting certain aggressions by Spain near New Orleans, and calling out the division to punish them.

EYE DESTROYED.—A son of Mr. Jordon, who farms the land of E. B. Dawson, Esq., in South Union township, met with a painful accident on Wednesday, by stepping upon a scythe snath, causing the scythe to fly up, the point of which struck him in the eye, completely destroying it. The wound was dressed by Dr. James Fuller. The boy is about ten years old.—Uniontown Genius.
