SPEECHES OF CASSIUS M. CLAY AND GEORGE D. BLAKE, AT COVINGTON, KY.—Last evening a large number of the citizens of the sister cities of Covington and Newport, met in front of the Seventh street market, Covington, to listen to addresses from the gentlemen named in the title of this. The proceedings of the meeting were several times interrupted by outside remarks of any thing but an amicable tenor, but there were no further manifestations of violent feeling.

Mr. Blakey first took the stand, he referred to the doctrines of the Republican party, defending them against the evil and false reports of interested men. He then reviewed the history of the Democratic party, denouncing the present administration, and likening it to that which the old Federal party sought to inaugurate.

Mr. Cassius M. Clay followed. As he took the stand he was met by a call for "Oswattomie Brown," whereupon he promised to speak of that man shortly, reminding his tormentors that "if some people in this section of the country don't mend their manners, they will make a great many more Oswattomie Browns than there are."

When last he addressed the people of Covington, the Democrats had asked him whether it would be agreeable that a Democrat should reply to him. This, then as always, he answered to, but instead of producing the man, a meeting was gotten up elsewhere, to draw the people off. This, he thought, looked suspicious, and he submitted to his audience whether it was not so. The orators of the Democratic party "were a little broken down—spavined; could not come up to the scratch, or could not make time, as they say in old Kentuck." He rejoiced that this had not happened this evening.

These are no times for illusions. Men in the ordinary transactions of life trust none without a knowledge of their characters or their intentions, and should it longer be said of the only people on earth professing to be entirely free, that they follow blind leaders, not knowing what manner of men they are, or whither they are wending? Are the questions of policy so mysterious that the laboring men of Kentucky cannot comprehend them?

According to the last census in Kentucky, there is one slaveholder to twenty men, women and children who own no slaves, and yet for advocating the rights of these twenty, who has declared to be a seditious man, a man of blood. Is it so? Whose interests was he advocating? If it were the interests of the one would not that one be his friend?

To turn to Oswatomie Brown. In his judgment, his foray had no connection with any political party, as such. It was nothing else than the sequence of the invasion of Kansas by the Southern pro slavery party united to their Northern allies! A realization of the sacred truth that they who "sow the wind shall reap the whirlwind."

He referred to the institution of slavery as depopulating the State of Kentucky, a thing looked for by the fathers of the Republic, who sought the prevention of it, and result, by preserving a space for freedom in the far off West. This reservation had been taken away by the Democratic party, who thus re opened the slavery discussion, produced the strife in Kansas, and ultimately, as the fruit of their outrages brought upon us "the affair at Harper's Ferry." In this connection, he referred to the debasing influence of slavery upon the negroes, who, when opportunity was afforded them to become free, availed themselves not of it; and upon the whites, who, afraid of their slaves, were so degraded as to leave the public good to its own support, resulting in the capture, by Brown and his little band, of the town, the arsenal and the people. He spoke these things plainly, because, as he said, "it is right you should hear a little wholesome truth in Kentucky, where you are not in the habit of hearing it." The infamous attempt to connect leading men in the Republic with this affair, he declared to be "too base for even all the baseness of the Democracy." As far as he was concerned with it, he spurned the charge and would not deign to reply to it.

Slavery is a weak and weakening institution a peculiar institution—a devilish peculiar institution, so weak, so devilish, that the Republicans were determined to keep it from the free Territories. Yet, they are States rights men, willing, in States now holding slaves, to let the legal majority decide on it the continuance for themselves

He reminded his audience of the passage in history, of Lycurgus advancing toward the Eastern monarch, bidding his myrmidons to fight with his handful of men, comparing the Republican party to the former, the Slave oligarchy to the latter, and prophesying a like result. He reminded them that all the people of the U. S. did not live in Covington and Newport, and that there were men whose bravery went beyond mobbing women, children and old men, that the voice of the press might be stifled.

About the cry of the dissolution of the Union, he argued the interest of the South, showing that the eighty millions realized from the cotton crop would, under a Southern confederacy, be eaten up in supporting the Government, leaving no money to purchase "pork and beans, and Kentucky jeans for the slaves." He believed that although many of the slaveholders were not only fools, but "foolish fools," there were some who were not, who would not be led away by any such foolery. As to the saying that "Cotton is King," he denied it in toto, holding that what Gen. Shelby called "dry grass" was King, for the value thereof produced exceeded the value of the cotton.

The next entered upon a consideration of the intentions of the Republican party; to wit: that they having possession of the government, will, in their domestic and foreign policy, sustain the rights of free labor, having respect always to the rights of the slaveholders within the present limits.

Mr. Henry C. Harris asked him what the Republicans intended to do, whether they were in favor of the abolition of slavery everywhere.

Mr. Clay replied that they would get possession of the government, protect free labor, sympathise in movements in favor of freedom among the countries of the old world, and generally show that "what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander." They would, however, not ask Dr. Joblin his opinion on the matter. In conclusion, he demanded of his interrogator what he would do if a Republican President should be elected; whether he would abide by the decision of the majority.

Mr. Harris—I will acquiesce if he behaves himself.

Mr. Clay wanted no more, but if the Democratic party does not, "by the eternal," said he, "as General Jackson used to say, we will make them. That is something we will do."

Toward the latter part of his remarks he was interrupted by some one calling out, "Let him down." "Pat and feather him," &c. The speaker informed these parties, in reply, that he was used to that kind of a thing, and he "would like to see it done."

When he took his seat Mr. Harris replied, glorifying the Democratic party.

THE JOHN BROWN INSURRECTION, AS VIEWED IN ENGLAND.—The British papers are discussing the Harper's Ferry affair. The London Times has the following comments upon it:

"Of course, there can be but one issue to this foolish and wicked enterprise. The insurgents will by their fate give warning to all who may dream of remedying a great social evil by an appeal to arms. But the state of society which causes such a scheme to be formed and carried out is not the less threatening. When a few Papists planned the blowing up of the English Parliament, the chances of success were desperate, but the act showed that there existed elements of danger in the State. Nor can it be doubted that with skilful and audacious leadership the colored people of Virginia would be capable of inflicting calamities on
