My dream is all about pies,
And the arts and wonders of baking,
to listen if you would be wise,
White I am the wonder relating. Pie making is not understeed,
(That is, I mean, to perfection.)
But if you would make them right good,
Just lest, while I give you direction.

There is every nameable kind, So many I cannot all mention. But before I have done, de you mind I'ft tell of a recent invention. I'll mention along in rotation ruch pies as you may have all seen And then, with my wife's approbation I'll telt you now just what I mean Thato is custard, apple and mince, And pumpkin, squash, and potato, And inion, and carrot, and quince, And I have heard tell of tomato But what is the use of my trying.

The quester I never can tell;
if, I did, you might totak I was 13 ing.
Or playing what some call a soli, Don't think I am telling a lie;
For as true as we're on the Earth planet
I heard of one who had a pic,
Exquisitely carred, of granite.

And as often as guesty he invited, He would set on the wonderful pie; And of course the old chap was delighted As some one to cut it would try. I heard of a pie made of wood, All painted in true imitation. The children soon found it no good, And pronounced it severe aggravation

And these women are wonderful wise'

Mrs. R.—— Is a notable cosk—

That is, if you test her on pies,

the knows the recipes like a book One day as she was pio making.
And frying of doughouts the while, lier gonine for wonder-creating involved a pie of new style. Her doughnuts, you see, seaked the fat— A trouble which piecesd not her eye. But, ah! she could remedy that— She jumbled them into a pie.

Then lote the oven 'twas put, And stewed and baked by the hour; In fact, 'twas as black as the seot, But then, she said, black was the flour When this wonderful pie was well done
I tell you it looked like a riddle;
For I counted them out one by one,
Three doughnuts, stuck fest in the middle-I was I ungry, and ate of this ple.

Which set me this muddle to drouming:
If it didn't; then all is a lic,
Nade up of whole cioth without seaming.

Young ment if you're thinking to marry, Just let a friend open your eyes; Go toil the young ladies to tarry— That is, till they loarn to make phys. And now to the ladies who'rs married: I tell you, with tears in my'eyes, If husbands are crabbed or worried, Just set out your very best pies. Tis then you will see the knit brow, Frowning down to cover his eyes,

So lovingly smile on his vrow— That is, while he's eating your ples. Dear ladies, we would not impress you
With the notion men marry for plen;
But, rather, they marry to blens you,
And to keep, you from rubbing your cyss. I swoke; for I heard a sweet voice,
