court for Frederick county transcended its powitis order and decree was void as to them. In support of this position they cited the case of Fenwick vs. Chapman, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in ? Peters. Mesers Meredith & Johnson, for the defence, contended that the court had no jurisdiction to consider the legality of the claim of service under which the negroes had been held in Maryland; that the only question for the court and jury to consider was the fact whether the negroes were actually held toservice or labor in Maryland, and whether they had escaped, therefrom, and having so escaped, whether Myers, being duly authorized, had captured them and restored them to their owners.

It was admitted all round that these negroes had been so held in Maryland under her laws, that they had escaped, been recaptured and taken back again. It was argued that a Pennsylvania court could not directly or indirectly try the question as to whether their "holding to service," was legal or not. It could only inquire into the fact of the holding, not the legality of the fact; and that the order and decree of the Orphans' Court for Frederick county was con-into the fact of the holding, not the legality of that fact; and that the order and decree of the Orphans' Court for Frederick county was conclusive evidence of their being so held to service or labor. That in Maryland the only manner in which the title of a negro to freedom could be established was in a court of law on petition, and that a Pennsylvania court could not try the question of credity or collaterally.

But the court held, and so instructed the jury, that the question for them to try was which they describe the first of all and one rule; that if afterwards they went at large with it was proved that they were manumitted under rule; that if afterwards they went at large with the assent of the executor, such going at large amounted to an assent to their legacy of freedom and the manufaction and their fact as a new pleadge by King Victor Emanuel to the cause of annexation and union.
