THE CATACOMBS OF PARIS.—In accordance with annual custom, some engineers of the municipality visited, a few days ago, the catacombs, which extend to a considerable distance beneath Paris, on the left bank of the river. The object of the visit was to ascertain that the arches, pillars, &c., which support the roof, remain perfectly solid. The engineers were accompanied by some gentlemen and ladies: and it is only on the occasion of these annual inspections that the catacombs can be visited at all. The entrance is in the courtyard on what was formerly the octrol office of the Barriere d'Enfor. It is closed by a thick door, and the catacombs are reached by a long narrow staircase descending about seventy feet. A man at the door counts the persons who enter, and gives each a lighted candle, which he is required constantly to carry. At the bottom of the staircase is a long, narrow gallery, the sides and roof of which are supported by masonry. This gallery, in which only two persons can walk abreast, leads to a spacious vault beneath the Plaine de Mont Souris, and in which vault are collected the bones formerly removed from the old cemeteries of Paris. Near the entrance to the vault is the inscription, N inanitas pas aux manes des morts! About twenty minutes are occupied in reaching the spot, and it is generally remarked that the visitors, influenced by the strangeness of the situation, and by the peculiar odor which prevails, soon become serious and silent.

In the vault the bones are piled up like wood in a timber yard, and galleries are formed in them for visitors to pass along. The bones are arranged in regular order to the height of six feet. The larger bones being outside, and the skulls being placed on the top. Here and there are inscriptions, indicating from what cemeteries the bones are brought, and also scraps of verse from different poets. There is one enormous heap of bones which has not yet been classified. It is calculated that not fewer than 3,000,000 persons must have been interred in the cemeteries from which the bones were removed. In the vault are some subterranean springs, which have been collected in a basin called the Fontaine de la Samaritaine. In fountain some gold fish were placed in 1813; they lived for a long time, but did not breed. In the other parts of the Catacombs the galleries are very numerous, and one of them is nearly five miles long. To prevent persons from losing their way, a broad black line is drawn on the wall from the entrance of the Catacombs to the vault.—Galignani's Messenger.

THE EAGLE SLATE COMPANY Being prepared to receive orders for their SUPERIOR GREEN AND PURPLE ROOFING SLATES, delivered after the opening of navigation, would call attention to the low cost of this FIRE-PROOF material, and to the great purity of rain water collected from slate roofs, not being impregnated with taint of decayed shingles or the poisonous particles of painted metals. They would also caution the public against parties falsely representing themselves as Agents, thereby furnishing an inferior article in the name of the genuine—the only agency established by the Company being in the City of New York. Parties in Canada and the North Western States wishing for the GENUINE EAGLE COS SLATES will please address the Company, at Hyde-ville, Vt., where orders will receive prompt attention.
