WORK IN THE GARDEN.—May is the best time for sowing the bulk of seeds for the main crop in the garden. The soil has then become sufficiently warmed to ensure the quick germination of the seed, and a rapid development of vegetation, on which much of our success in gardening depends.

CARROTS.—The bulk of this crop may now be sown. Select a rich and rather light soil; dig deep, make the ground as mellow as possible, and sow in rows fifteen inches apart. Do not cover the seeds more than two inches deep, and press the soil to them by treading on a board. The Early Shorthorn is the best kind for table use. This variety is delicious even when quite young, so that the seed can be sown quite thick, and the young carrots pulled out in thinning can be used for the table.

SALSIFY.—Sometimes known as the Vegetable Oyster, requires much the same soil and treatment as carrots, and is usually sown in drills one foot apart, and afterward thinned out to six inches apart in the rows.

PEAS.—Plant dwarf beans in rows two feet apart, with an interval of six inches between each bean. It is well not to sow all at the same time, but plant a few rows every ten days, so as to keep up a succession during the summer.

CUCUMBERS AND MELONS.—Now is the time to get these planted. Almost every grower has a method of procedure in regard to the best manner of "fixing" melon beds, suitable to his own soil and climate; and it would occupy more space than we can spare were we to go into details. The main point is to get the ground warm and rich, and keep it moderately moist. Make the hills at least four feet apart. A mixture of soot and wood ashes sprinkled over the young plants on a dewy morning is very useful to assist in keeping away the striped bug. Leave but three or four vines in a hill, and as soon as the rough leaves appear nip off the terminal buds, so as to make the plants branch out. Keep the soil well stirred with a small hoe. Melons and cucumbers should not be grown very near each other, if its wanted to save the seed.

SQUASHES.—These require a rich soil and plenty of room. They are usually grown on broad, flat hills, raised an inch or two above the level of the ground, and placed from six to eight feet apart each way. Plant six or eight seeds in each, and afterward leave only the three strongest to grow. If several varieties are grown, they should not be placed near each other, unless it is not designed to save any of their seed.

CABBAGE.—Seed of the late varieties, such as the Flat Dutch, Savoy, and Drumhead, may now be sown in a warm border, to get some plants for setting out in July. Transplant the early kinds, and also cauliflower. They require a strong soil, and will bear heavy manuring. The distance between the plants when set out varies from one and a half to three feet.

A moist, cloudy day is the best time for transplanting, and it is well to dip the roots before planting in a composition of black mould, and a little soot, made into thin mud with the assistance of liquid manure.

TOMATOES.—Such as are intended to be transplanted should be set out now, first dipping the roots in the same mixture recommended for cabbage plants.

EGG PLANTS.—These are usually grown in a hot-bed, and transplanted into a warm border about the last of May. Plant singly, in hills two feet apart, and shade for several days, giving plenty of water; afterward draw earth to the plants, and keep the ground very clean.

CELERY.—It is perhaps too late this month to sow celery; but if any was sown last month, they may be transplanted into an open bed and placed three or four inches apart, to stock and harden, preparatory to their final removal into the trenches.

SWEET CORN.—Plant in hills three feet apart; when up allow only three plants in each hill to grow. Hoe deep and frequently, and cut off the side shoots and suckers. It is well to have a succession, by planting some every two weeks in vacant spaces, where some of the early salads have been grown.

THE FLOWER GARDEN.—In this country flowers do not receive that attention from our rural population that they are entitled to. Most people seem to be contented to keep on growing the old-fashioned hollyhocks, cabbage roses, marigolds, etc, which seem but little better than common weeds besides their more beautiful congeners seen in the gardens of those who will take the trouble to procure the seeds of the new and improved varieties, now becoming plentiful in the hands of good seedsmen.

Now is the time to sow the seeds of annuals, and plant out verbenas, phloxes, and other more tender plants from the green-houses to the open air. Keep the garden neat and free from weeds, and stir the flower beds frequently with a small hoe or fork.—[Genesee Farmer.
