PITTSBURGH:

MONDAY MORNING, DEC 31, 1860.

Latest from Washington.

The Dispatches from Washington received last night announce a division in the Cabinet, on the demand of the South Carolina Commissioners to evacuate Fort Sumter. It seems that the Secessionists had an understanding with the President that the Government was to make no resistance to an attempt on the part of South Carolina to take possession. Major Anderson's prompt action spoiled this arrangement effectually, and hence the trouble in the Cabinet. The decision at present is unfavorable to the Secessionists, but whether the President, whose inclinations are in their favor, will hold out to the end remains to be seen. Floyd has resigned his post, and his example will be soon followed by Thompson, of Mississippi, and Thomas, of Maryland, both Disunionists.

It is said that on Friday night Bigler and other Northern Democrats called on the President and urged him to take a firm stand against giving up the forts. The Old Public Functionary is in about as comfortable a position as he intended that Major Anderson should occupy at Fort Moultrie, with Fort Sumter on one side and the Secessionists' battery on the other.

The Sentiment of the South.

The news of the occupation of Fort Sumter by the gallant Major Anderson has been received throughout the North with the most enthusiastic approval. At New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, and even at Baltimore, the crowds of people who surrounded the newspaper bulletin boards, at the same time expressed their admiration of the conduct of the commander of the forces at Charleston, and their contempt for the miserable executive who refused to reinforce him in the hour of need. The President's faithlessness to his high trust, is every day becoming more and more apparent to men of all parties, and while corruption and treason "rules the hour" at the capital, the sentiment of the country indicates a patriotic devotion to the Union. The people have resolved with unprecedented unanimity, that the government must be maintained and its authority enforced. In the conduct of the present Executive they have seen already too much of the evil effects of vacillation and cowardice, and they now long for the time when a man shall assume the control of public affairs. The head of the nation is Mr. Lincoln, and from our knowledge of the man, we feel assured that that hope will be realized to the satisfaction of every patriot in the land. A little more than two months will relieve the capitol of the presence of the vandals who now disgrace it.

What the South Carolinians Demand.—

The Commissioners of South Carolina are now in Washington, prepared to make their demands on the Government. The Washington correspondent of the North American thus sets forth what these demands are:

"The three Commissioners from South Carolina reached here last night, and are established at private quarters, desiring to avoid all unnecessary publicity. If this decorous reserve had been practised by their convention at home, a great deal of loss and censorious criticism might have been avoided. The object of this commission is to treat with the Government for the delivery of the forts, magazines, light houses and other real estate within the limits of South Carolina, and also for the apportionment of the public debt, and for a division of all other property held by the government of the United States, &c. The modest proposition, which merely asks the Government to give up public property over which South Carolina not only relinquished all jurisdiction, but acknowledged the authority of the United States as sovereign and complete, will be presented to the President to-day, and by him communicated to Congress. It required no great sagacity to foresee the disposition which would be made of it there. The right of secession may be discussed over again, as it was in 1832 and 1850; but the [illegible] Constitution [illegible] upon which it was formed, exist [illegible] of the other parties. [illegible] refusing to acquiesce in the [illegible] resident for [illegible] covers [illegible] intended to destroy the Government [illegible] are responsible to receive under the [illegible] Constitution. The Senate may give [illegible] consideration, as the dominant majority in that chamber are more than half inclined to sympathize with the secession scheme, and some of them are mainly responsible for its inception, progress, and present importance. In any event the Commissioners are likely to return home without receiving much comfort at the hands of Congress, however they may be welcomed by the President."

The Philadelphia Ledger—a paper which has generally shown a decided sympathy with the Buchanan administration—cannot endorse the Disunion movements of the old Public Functionary. In some remarks on the South Carolina "Declaration of Independence," it says:

"Of all the documents which the history of our country has produced, none is so humiliating, in every point of view, as the South Carolina Declaration of Independence. As, in that State, they have seen fit to abolish the 4th of July, as a holiday, they might, at least, have let the Declaration of Independence, which it commemorated, alone, and not have turned it into burlesque as they have. Perhaps, however, nothing will so fully convince themselves, ten years hence, of the folly of what has here been attempted as the perusal of this very document compared with the facts of the case.

"In the ordinance of 1776, a decent respect was recognized, on the part of the opinions of mankind, and the reasons impelled the Declaration. But here this precedent is reversed purposely, and as if to insult public opinion by an indecent disregard of it, the ordinance is passed first and the justification is made up afterwards. The making of this is, then, South Carolina claims the right to secede at pleasure and without any reason, as she asserted in 1832, if she thinks it would be for her own interest. Hence she speaks of 'resuming' her independence, as if it had existed, as a matter of course and of right, that 'compact' wherein by the pleasure of other party, a man might, with just as much reason, marry some beautiful heiress, and when he had got all your property and her beauty pleased him no longer, or he thought he could do better in a new alliance, might pass an ordinance that he had 'determined to resume his sovereignty,' and leave wife and children to get along as they could. There are many contracts that never can be undone by the simple consent even of both the parties that make them, and this of secession is one of these. But that it can be effected by the simple repeal on the part of one of the two is so absurd that, while the right is taken for granted, other reasons are carefully [illegible]

Seward was present at the New [illegible] Astor House, New York, on [illegible] and made a speech. While [illegible] the progression of the [illegible] fatal. shape of arms and supplies it not of armies and navies, from some of the great powers of Europe. A little reflection will show what this sort of thing is worth.

There can be no doubt on the mind of any one who has spent any portion of his life in Europe, that the anti-slavery sentiment there, especially in France, and most especially in England, bears about the same relation even to the fanaticism prevalent in New England, that the pungency of nitric acid bears to the milder acidity of crab vinegar. Any attempt of a British Ministry, for example, based on whatever consideration of commercial profit or material welfare, to espouse the pro-slavery side of an inter-State quarrel, would produce a vote of censure in the House of Commons, so immediate and decided as to throw the Ministry out of power before the lapse of twenty four hours. The popular pressure which so remorselessly converted the Island of Jamaica into a barren waste, would, with equal readiness, sacrifice the bread of a million British operatives, rather than tolerate a step in the direction of government aid to a slaveholding power, in a contest involving the maintenance or abolition of slavery."

The Mississippi Secession Commissioner, who was deputed to sound Gov. Hicks, of Maryland, on secession, receives but cold comfort. Gov. H. replies at length to the enquiry of the Commissioner whether he—the Governor—would "convene the legislature for the purpose of cooperating with Mississippi in measures necessary to defend the rights of the South, and to form a new confederacy," concluding by saying that "when he is satisfied that there is no hope of adjustment, and not until then, will he exercise any power with which he is vested to afford even an opportunity for such a proceeding."

The Pennsylvania Legislature will meet to-morrow. The Governor's message will be delivered on the following day, there being no probability of any difficulty in the organization of either branch. Gov. Curtin will be inaugurated on the third Tuesday in January.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Special Dispatches to "The Press."]

WASHINGTON, Dec 27, 1860.—No event which has transpired within my recollection ever caused so much excitement in this city as the occupation of Fort Sumpter by Major Anderson. The intelligence of the affair reached here early this morning, and since then every one has been busy receiving and imparting the thousand rumors in reference to the matter. It appears that Major Anderson's course was taken on his own responsibility, for the purpose of strengthening his position, and thus preserving the lives of the men placed under his charge. The President was entirely unprepared for such decisive action on the part of a subordinate, and at once sent for the Secretary of War and General Scott, to know what it meant. At the meeting quite an angry dispute arose, the President and Secretary of War denouncing Major Anderson's conduct, and declaring that he had violated orders by forsaking Fort Moultrie and taking possession of Fort Sumpter, while Gen. Scott defended his conduct, and pretty plainly intimated his contempt for those who not only seconded willing to sacrifice the lives of innocent men, but also exhibited a disposition to see important defences fall into the hands of the enemies of the country. In his opinion, Major Anderson had done exactly right, and could not have acted otherwise, sworn as he was to protect the lives of the officers and men under his command and under strict orders to defend his position. The principle of self preservation required the occupation of Fort Sumpter, which entirely commanded Fort Moultrie, and if Major Anderson had not taken possession of it, he would have been placed at the mercy of the South Carolina disunionists; whose rebellion it was to have thrown a sufficient force in it to force his surrender, or insure his destruction. Immediately after this meeting a cabinet council was convened, but nothing was done. Mr Buchanan's advisers exonerated each other from all blame for the consequences which a fight follow, and united in the conclusion that Major Anderson and General Scott had determined to act for the Union, and not for the President under whose orders the laws of the country placed them. The treatment of this insubordination, in the present state of the country, is a delicate matter, and there is reason to hope that Mr. Buchanan will not dare to punish it by recalling Major Anderson. If this should be done, it is learn that General Scott, will immediately resign his official position, and offer his services to his country. Should an attempt be made to take Washington, as the Enquirer and the Examiner, of Richmond, Virginia, constantly advise, he will no doubt place himself at the head of the militia of the District who are all devoted to the Union.

Our citizens talk of surrounding "Old Chapultepec". The Cabinet are now in session, but good care is taken to keep the nature of their deliberations shall not transpire.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Dec. 27, 1860

The intelligence of Major Anderson's removal from Fort Moultrie to Fort Sumpter, produced a profound impression here, and [illegible] is the latest case:

[illegible] present position is [illegible] against [illegible] South Carolina [illegible] and Secession [illegible] channels, and all the [illegible] to the contrary. He acted without any instructions from the War Department, except to hold the forts and act on the defensive, though it is known that Gen. Scott favored this step, when reinforcements were refused for Fort Moultrie, and perhaps many here have received as much to the officer in command of the station.

Major Anderson had the right to make the transfer, though it undoubtedly involves a deal of responsibility under present circumstances. The President is not urged to supercede him, but as the force has not been augmented, which was the point raised by the authorities of South Carolina, he will hesitate before venturing to rebuke this act.

A Cabinet meeting was held on the subject this afternoon.

The Disunionists denounce Major Anderson's conduct in the strongest terms, and regard it as exhibiting a hostile animus on the part of the administration. They say it will precipitate a crisis, but others believe it is the best peace-preserver yet devised. While Major Anderson holds Fort Sumpter, there will be no collision.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Dec. 28.—It is generally understood that the telegraph office at the Louisville Courier is very indignant about this hoax, declaring it "written by some miscreant." The "stately residence" of "Capt. Fant Myers," in which the gallant Captain is "confined," is the Louisville jail. The "Low Mounted Minute Men" of "Castle Thomas Building" are supposed to constitute the obnoxious gang.

Effect of the Charleston News in New York.

The telegraphic dispatches announcing that Fort Moultrie had been evacuated and dismantled by Maj. Anderson, was bulletined yesterday about noon, and produced considerable sensation. Crowds gathered about the newspaper establishments, impatiently awaiting the appearance of the evening papers; and the various bulletins, where the dispatches were posted, were thronged by an excited multitude eager to catch a glance of the particulars. On 'Change, in the street, in hotels and bar-rooms, the exciting news was the topic of remark, and in some cases of exciting discussion. The motives for the act—the authority on which Maj. Anderson probably acted—and the results likely flow from the movement, were earnestly canvassed. All sorts of rumors were current. Some said it was humiliating—this surrendering a fort of the United States without firing a gun, or before even a shot was fired from the enemy to its ears. Others praised the strategetic skill which stole a march on the threatening Carolinians—and, while relinquishing possession of a really defensible position, rendered any occupancy of it precipitate impossible. The movement, when the chances of collision, by give material to resist attack. So averse the possibility of a serious collision—so sure the possibility of a serious collision—occur. The great blunder or crime of Maj. Anderson without the necessary reinforcements were everywhere denounced.
