tired for the night, the lady being ill. McAllister's father, an elderly gentleman, was still up, and being requested by the young man to call over and see Mrs. Carr, he did so. While he was absent, the young rascal stels a trank from a room in the bouse, and carried it back to the stable, where he broke it open with En. ax, and rified it of fifty-two dollars is gold and two silver, pencil cases. A little beg of gold dost, valued at about forly dollars, which had been cont as a present to Mr. McAllister from California, was overlooked by the thief. When the lad mot been cent for at all, and on his return the larcenty was discovered. Mr. McAllister and his wife both heard the noise in the house, but not being aware that the old gentleman was absent, they post an attention to it. The young
