Quack Nostrums.

THE NEW YORK DAY BOOK says: "The majority of Hair Washes, Hair Dyes, Hair Tonics, Hair Oils, and the numerous preparations which are now before the public under such extravagant, hyperbolical and fantastic titles as we are paraded in show window cards, and newspaper headings, as hair preparations, are all humbugs of the first water, their real object being money, and their pretensions, as they do no harm. HOOD'S LARD, WHALE OIL, LARD OIL AND BEAR OIL, are all that is represented, make up, when in beautiful wrappers and white flint glass bottles, the loveliest combination of tonics, and when they are perfumed with some of Hood's delightful scents, they stir up verdant young and old of both sexes. Such is not the character of Professor Wood's Hair Restorative. This gentlemen comes before the world without any "Mexican Balsams," Xylobalsamum, or any other astounding and startling catchpenny terms to be attached to it, but entitles it Hair Restorative—what it expresses precisely—and as a Restorative it stands. Say Professor Wood's Hair Restorative, and as you value your scalp, eye, your very brains, apply nothing else for it may be that you will get some worse substance then perfumed lard oil on your premises. Remember, Wood's Restorative for the Hair is the best article extant."

It Will, by Nature's own Process, Restore Gray Hair to the Original Color, Will make Hair Grow on Bald Heads, Will restore the Natural Secretions, Will remove all Dandruff, Will cure all eruptions—even Scald Head, Will make the Hair Soft and Glossy, Will make the Most Aged appear young again, Will preserve the Color of Hair to old age, Will always Please it and stop its Falling, And is one of the best Toilet Articles for the Hair now in use.

Manufactured by O. J. WOOD & CO., and sold Wholesale and Retail, at 444 Broadway, New York, and 114 Market st., St Louis, Mo.

Sold in Pittsburgh by Dr. GEO. H. KEYSER, D. LAUGHEAD & CO., and all druggists. jan2dly

NOTICE TO CRUDE CARBON OIL COLlectors.—The subscribers are well located and have facilities to those having crude oil for sale, to dispose of them. They have one of the best warehouses and cellars in the city for that purpose.

They will receive, store and deliver to order, or sell on commission, making liberal advances. They will also receive and store refined oil, and sell on commission, when desired. To those in Crude Oil, we think we can offer facilities very much to their advantage.

PITTSBURGH:

WEDNESDAY MORNING, JAN. 16.

Inauguration of Governor Curtin--His Inaugural Address.

[Special Dispatch to the Pittsburgh Gazette.]

HARRISBURG, Jan. 15, 1861.

Gov. Curtin arrived here on Saturday evening, and put up at the Jones House.

The town is full of applicants for the few offices in his gift, and the Jones House is overflowing with Pittsburghers and Philadelphians.

The inauguration took place to-day, at noon. The procession of military and citizens was formed at half-past ten o'clock, under the auspices of Gen. W. H Keim, the Chief Marshal, and marched to the Capitol. There were several fine companies of military present, and the procession presented a very imposing appearance.

Arrived at the Capitol, the two Houses met in joint Convention, and the Governor elect, with Gov. Packer, having taken their places beside the Speaker of the two Houses, after prayer by Rev. Mr. Cattell, of the Presbyterian church, the oath of office was administered by Hon. Robert M. Palmer, Speaker of the Senate.

The Governor then, in the presence of a vast and deeply attentive audience, proceeded to read the following

INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

Having been entrusted by the people of Pennsylvania, with the administration of the Executive department of the government for the next three years, and having taken a solemn oath of fidelity to the Constitution of the United States, and to the Constitution of Pennsylvania, I avail myself of your presence to express to you, and through you to the people of the State, my gratitude for the distinguished honor they have, in their partiality, conferred upon me.

Deeply impressed with its responsibilities and duties, I enter upon the office of Governor of Pennsylvania, with a determination to fulfil them all faithfully to the utmost of my ability. Questions of great moment intimately connected with the convictions and interests of the people of all parts of the Nation, now agitate the public mind; and some of them, from their novelty and importance, are left for settlement in the uncertainty of the future. A selfish caution might indicate silence as the safest course to be pursued as to these questions, by one just entering upon the responsibilities of high official position; but fidelity to the high trust reposed in me demands, especially at this juncture, that I yield to an honored custom which requires a frank declaration of the principles to be adopted, and the policy to be pursued during my official term.

We have assumed, as the great fundamental truth of our present theory, that man is capable of self-government, and that all power emanates from the people. An experience of seventy-three years, under the Constitution of the United States, has demonstrated to all mankind that the people can be entrusted with their own political destinies; and the deliberate expression of their will should furnish the rule of conduct to their representatives in official station. Thus appreciating their liberal capacity for self-government, and alive to the importance of preserving, pure and unsullied as it came from the hands of the Apostles of Liberty, this vital principle, I pledge myself to stand between it and encroachment, whether instigated by hatred or ambition, by fanaticism or folly.

The policy that should regulate the administration of the government of our State, was declared by its founders, and is fully established by experience. It is just and fraternal in its aims, liberal and patriotic in its progress. The freedom of speech and of the press, the right of conscience and of private judgment in civil and religious faith, are the high prerogatives to which the American citizen is born. In our social organization the rich and the poor, the high and the low, enjoy those equally, and the Constitution and the laws in harmony therewith, protect the rights of all. The intelligence of the people is one of the main pillars of the fabric of our government, and the highest hopes of the patriot for its safety rests on enlightened public morality and virtue. Our system of common Schools will ever enlist my earnest solicitude. Its growing wants should be met by the Legislature in the most liberal spirit. I feel that I need not urge this duty. The system has been gaining in strength and usefulness for a quarter of a century, until it has silenced opposition by its beneficent fruits. It has at times languished for want of just appropriations, from changes and amendments of the law, and perhaps from inefficiency in its administration; but it has surmounted every difficulty and is now regarded by the enlightened and patriotic portion of every political faith as the great bulwark of safety for our free institutions. The manner in which this subject is presented to the Legislature, by my immediate predecessor, in his annual message, fully harmonizes with public sentiment; and his recommendation for aid to the Farmers' High School of Pennsylvania meets my most cordial approbation. Invited to the rich prairie lands of the West, where the labor of the husbandman is simple and uniform, when population has filled our valleys, it passes away from our highland soils where scientific culture is required to reward labor by bringing fruitfulness and plenty out of comparative sterility. While individual liberality has done much for an institution that is designed to educate the farmer of the State, the School languishes for the want of public aid. An experience of ten years has fully demonstrated that the institution can be made self-sustaining; and it requires no aid from the State except for the completion of the buildings in accordance with the original design. A liberal appropriation for that purpose would be honorable to the Legislature, and a just recognition of a system of public instruction that is of the highest importance to the State in the development of our wealth, the growth of our population and the prosperity of our great agricultural interests.

The State has been wisely relieved of the management of the public improvements by their sale, the administration of the government is greatly simplified, its resources are certain and well understood, and the amount of the debt is definitely ascertained. A rigid economy in all its various departments and a strict accountability from all public officers, are expected by our people, and they will not be disappointed. Now that the debt of the State is in the course of steady liquidation, by the ordinary means of the treasury, all unnecessary expenditures of the public money must be firmly resisted, so that the gradual diminution of the indebtedness shall not be interrupted.

To promote the prosperity of the people another power of the Commonwealth, by a liberal recognition of the vast interests of our commerce, by husbanding our resources and diminishing the burdens of taxation and of debt, will be the highest objects of my ambition, and all the energy of my administration will be directed to the accomplishment of these results.

The pardoning power is one of the most important and delicate powers conferred upon the Chief Magistrate by that Constitution, and it should always be exercised with great caution, and never except on the most conclusive evidence, that it is due to the condemned, and the public security will not be prejudiced by the act. When such applications are presented to the Executive it is due to society, to the administration of Justice, and to all interested, that public notice should be given. By the adoption of such regulations imposition will be prevented and just efforts will be strengthened.

The association of capital and labor, under acts of incorporation, where the purposes to be accomplished are beyond the reach of individual enterprise, has long been the policy of the State, and has done much to advance the prosperity of the people. When the means of the citizens are moderate, as they generally are in a new and growing country, and when the concentration of the capital of many is necessary to development and progress, such associations, when judiciously restricted, confer large benefits on the State. The vast resources of Pennsylvania, and the variety of her mechanical and other industrial pursuits, invite capital and enterprise from abroad, which, on every sound principle of political economy, should be encouraged. Much of the time of the Legislature is consumed by applications for special chartered privileges which might be saved by the enactment of general laws and by such amendment to our general mining and manufacturing law as will remove needless and burthensome restraints, and at the same time afford ample protection to capital and labor, and to the community at large. Our statute books are full of acts of incorporation conferring special privileges, various as they are numerous, dissimilar in their grants of power, and unequal in their liabilities and restrictions. Well considered and judicious general laws to meet all classes of corporations, would remedy the evil, economise time and money; relieve the Legislature from the constant pressure for undue privileges, and be just and equal to all in their administration.

The veto power, as conferred upon the Executive by the Constitution, is one of the extraordinary powers of our government. It was given with much hesitation, and not without serious misgivings as to its abuse, by the framers of our organic law. It is, in my judgment, to be used with the greatest caution; and only when legislation is manifestly inconsiderate, or of more than doubtful constitutionality. The legislature, chosen as they are directly by the people, is such a manner that a fair expression of their views or the true policy of the government can always be had, gives to all well-considered measures of legislation the solemn sanction of the highest power of the State, and it should not be arbitrarily defied. While I shall shrink from no duty involved by the sacred trust reposed in me by the people of the Commonwealth, I would have every department
