REJECTION OF THE CRITTENDEN RESOLUTIONS.—Those who were led, more by their wishes than by their judgment, to hope for the passage of the Crittenden resolutions in the Senate, will be disappointed in their practical defeat by the adoption of Mr. Clark's amendment; but those who looked at the matter in the light of all the facts, can find no cause of regret at the result.

The resolutions themselves were delusive. They held out the hope of peace, without possessing the least element of peace in them. They proposed to amend a Constitution under which the nation has lived happily from the start, and to amend it in an unconstitutional way; and if the amendment had been adopted, both by Congress and the people, it would have left the slavery question still an open one, to be settled at some future time, perhaps under more aggravated circumstances and with greater danger to the Union.

They contained, moreover, a concession to the South, of the principle that slaves are property and, as such, should be protected by Congressional enactments. They conceded, in fact, the Breckinridge platform, of a Congressional Slave Code, for at least a part of the Territories; and in so doing were at variance with the overwhelming public sentiment of the nation.

In conceding this, they conceded nearly all that the ultra South is contending for; and what equivalent was given the North? We look through them, in vain, to find any. They do, indeed, permit the exclusion of Slavery North of 36° 30'; but that power we already possess, not only North, but South of that line, without and in spite of, the resolutions; and instead of being a concession, the resolutions propose, on the contrary, to limit the application of that power and prevent the exercise of it in all the territory we are likely hereafter to acquire, for it is notorious that all the territory upon which the greedy eyes of the nation are set, lie South of the Missouri Compromise line. The resolutions, therefore, practically ask us to surrender to Slavery, by a Constitutional amendment, all the territory we are likely to acquire hereafter, including Mexico and Central America.

We do not wonder that the Republicans of the Senate voted unanimously for Mr. Clark's amendment, and so against the resolutions. To tie up their hands and the hands of the nation by incorporating into the Constitution a provision practically establishing (by guaranteeing) slavery in all our territory south of 36° 30', and in all likely to be acquired hereafter, would be suicidal. It is not marvelous that they shrank from it as from the greatest of all the perils now encompassing the nation. The true marvel is how any Republican could look with favor upon such a proposition.

Let us suppose the amendment adopted. The free people of the North would either at once surrender to Slavery the territory south of 36° 30', or they would enter into one of the bitterest struggles ever witnessed to possess it; for although practically excluded from it they might, if they chose, make an effort to settle in it as in Kansas. In the first case, Slavery would, in a few years, obtain absolute and undisputed control of the government; in the other case, the Kansas struggle would be renewed in every territory, embittered by new aggravations and rendered more violent by the increased magnitude of the interests at stake. In either case, it is impossible to contemplate the result with calmness. The triumph of Slavery without a further struggle is a terrible thing to look forward to; and the perpetuation of a struggle for mastery—of the "irrepressible conflict"—is just as terrible.

It is better, far better, that the two principles of Freedom and Slavery, now brought face to face, should be permitted to fight it out, at once and forever. Compromise will not settle it; it can only postpone the settlement of it. It will be a short and sharp, but decisive struggle, and then we will have done with it. The moment the government falls into the hands of a man strong enough to will and purpose to wield its power effectually, we shall begin to see the end. The thing has come to a crisis, now; let it work itself out, and have done with it.

THE DELUSION OF COMPROMISE.—We are asked, by those who favor the Crittenden resolutions, if we were not satisfied with the Missouri Compromise before it was repealed, and if so, why we protest against its restoration.

We answer that there is no proposition pending to restore the Missouri Compromise. Mr. Crittenden's resolutions do not propose it, nor is the idea entertained in any other project before Congress.

The Missouri Compromise, as it existed from 1820 to 1854, when Mr. Douglas repealed it with the aid of those Democrats who now stigmatise every one who will not sign oaths with them for public meetings ostensibly (but not really) to aid it in its restoration, applied only to the territory acquired by the Louisiana purchase. Most of that territory has now been framed into States, and the suggested restoration could affect only the small strip of country occupied by the civilized Indians and not open to settlement. We have no objections to the restoration of the Compromise as it stood in 1854.

But, this is not what the Crittenden resolutions import. They propose to establish the Missouri Compromise line, with regard to all territories now possessed and to all hereafter to be acquired.

This, the candid reader will see, is an entirely different thing from the restoration of the Compromise which Mr. Douglas and the Democratic party repealed.

No one, looking at the past history of this nation, can fail to see that the acquisition of new territory is a settled part of its policy; and a single glance at the map will show that all the territory we are likely hereafter to acquire, lies south of the line of 36° 30'.

It is a very cunning scheme, therefore, to incorporate into the Constitution a provision practically securing all this territory to slavery, whenever acquired, and that, too, under the plea that it is a compromise," a "plan of settlement," the "the olive branch of peace," and all that sort of thing. By this plan the North gets nothing that she has not already got, and the South gets all she asks for.

But this is not the only difference. The original Missouri Compromise was a mere act of Congress, and therefore a subject of repeal, while the Crittenden plan involves its incorporation into the Constitution, where it can never be reached, no matter what foul injustice it may work. It would have been better if the original compromise had not been subject to repeal, but this "compromise," if once adopted, will possess its greatest element of injury and wrong in the fact that the people can never reach it, no matter how ardently they may desire to do so.

Those who wish to tie up their own hands, and those of their children and their children's children, to the remotest posterity, in the vain hope of securing "peace" thereby, may do it; we shall neither counsel nor aid in it. Better strife a thousand times than a surrender of rights essential to liberty and prosperity.

THE rail roads crossing the Western prairies are prohibited from drifting snow in Winter by high fences, which serve in Summer to keep the cattle from the crops. In the Winter of 1855, before these fences were constructed, the Illinois Central rail road company expended $100,000 in endeavoring to keep their track clear.

LATEST NEWS BY MAIL.

[Special Dispatch to the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—The instructions to be sent to Major Anderson await the return of Lieut. Hall, who has gone to New York, and will be back here to-morrow.

The instructions are to the effect that the present status of affairs in Charleston harbor must be maintained. The President is also informed that Major Anderson will be allowed to receive mail matter from the Charleston Postoffice, daily, and will be permitted to receive supplies of provisions and go to market. This much the South Carolina authorities concede.

With a fair understanding, peace may be maintained.

Col. Hayne is satisfied that he cannot obtain from the administration more than a mere pledge that no reinforcements will be sent to Fort Sumter. He calls upon the President to-day for a more interchange of views, but no official action is expected to result from it. He will remain here several days.

The commander of the Brooklyn has made his report to the Navy Department. The ship is at her old anchorage under Fortress Monroe.

It is understood that her late trip to Charleston was for the sole purpose of intercepting the Star of the West and countermanding the orders given to her captain. No preparations were made on board of the Brooklyn for action, her guns being unshotted.

A large amount of provisions has been sent within a day or two for the garrison at Fortress Monroe.

Several government clerks, who are avowed secessionists, have been notified that their services will not be required after to-day.

A dispatch has been received here saying that some of the members of the Alabama Convention, from the Northern part of the State, refuse to sign the secession ordinance.

[Special Dispatch to the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.]

Lieut. Talbot, who expected to leave yesterday for Fort Sumter, left this morning, with instructions and orders for Maj. Anderson.

Fort Sumter is to be defended at all hazards.

The Constitution this morning denounces Judge Smalley in bitter terms for his recent charge in regard to treason, to the Grand Jury of the United States Court in your city.

Private letters from Georgia indicate the prevalence and growth of Union feeling in that State.

The Senate's committee of Commerce held a meeting to-day. Messrs. Clay and Toombs were absent.

The question was taken on the nomination of Mr. McIntyre as collector for the port of Charleston. It was defeated by the vote of three Southern Senators against two Northern. So the Committee decided not to report the nomination to the Senate.

Mr. Bigler was acting chairman of the committee.

The State Department is engaged in the preparation of a circular, in response to the frequent inquiries of foreign Ministers, in regard to the granting of clearances by the State authorities. This matter rises into importance and cannot be overlooked.

Col. Hayne called on the President last evening, and was politely received. He stated verbally, and fully the purpose of his mission, which was to demand the unconditional withdrawal of the garrison of Fort Sumter. The President heard him through patiently and attentively, and without the slightest intimation as to what his own views were.

When Col. Hayne concluded his statement, the President requested him to submit it in writing when he would consider it and communicate his reply. This was all that occurred, and Col. Hayne left hastily in the dark as to what the reply will be. He has been busily engaged most of the day in preparing the document, but the urgent solicitations of a large number of Southern Senators, I understand, have induced Col Hayne to modify his views, and he has telegraphed this fact to Gov. Pickens and asked for further instructions. These Southern Senators insist on South Carolina doing no act which will involve a collision.

Senator Davis has dictated and forwarded a letter to Gov. Pickens, which was written by another Senator, in which he supplicates them to abandon any policy which would involve hostilities, and not only open their markets freely to Major Anderson, but to cultivate kindly relations with him. Mr. Davis speaks of Anderson in the highest terms. He says he knows him well, and that he is as honorable as he is brave, and will never abuse their confidence.

The secession leaders are beginning to fear reaction at home. The highest encomiums yet passed on Major Anderson were those by the South Carolina Legislature. The, taken in connection with the sudden change of tone in Anderson's notes to Gov. Pickens, is causing much talk in official circles here.

The President will positively refuse to withdraw the garrison, as demanded by Colonel Hayne, but if the proposition be modified as insisted on by nearly all the Southern Senators, they think it will be accepted.

I understand that the Cabinet to-day determined in the evening.

RICHARDSON'S
IRISH LINENS,
DAMASKS, DIAPERS, &C.
CONSUMERS OF RICHARDSON'S LINENS, and those desirous of obtaining the GENUINE GOODS, should see that the packages they purchase are sealed with the full name of the firm,
J. N. RICHARDSON, SONS & OWDEN, as a guarantee of the excellence and durability of the Goods.

This caution is rendered essentially necessary, as large quantities of inferior and defective Linens are constantly offered for sale, stamped and sealed with the name of RICHARDSON, by Irish Houses, who, regardless of the injury they inflict upon the character of the American consumer and the manufacturers of the genuine Goods, will not readily abandon a business so profitable, while purchasers can be imposed on with Goods of a worthless character.
