THE CONNELLSVILLE BOAD. The Philadelphia Ledger, referring to the remark of Mr. President GABRETT, of the Baltimore & Ohio Road, that "the merchante, the manufacturers, the capitalist tern Pennsylvania demand the construction of this road as one man," asks pertinently, "why i, it that the feelings or the people of Pittsburgh and Western Pennsylvania are thus alienated from Phita del-phia, that they should 'as one man' d. mand a new outlet to the scaboard that wai give Philadelphia the go by? Why is it so These are questions that the merchants capitalists, manufacturers and poople of adeipuis should demand answers to.

They might have demanded answers these questions any time within these past ten years, and it is but little to their credit that they have not demanded them. New, when it is too late, they begin to ask, an to wonder, and to comprehend dimly that monopolies cannot exist long in a free gov-erament, and that the people who are oppressed by them will seek the first and bes apportunity of escaping from them. We do not know that we can give the ans their interests altogether in its calcul-Second. Because the best protection to an people against imposition is Competition. It is essential to us to have a competing line to the east, in order to give us the local advantage which every leading locality west of us has ... And Third, Because there is more business here than any one railroad can attend to. The Ponusylvania Road, with all its capacity, is unable to accommodate the traffic naturally eintering here, and we need another railroad or two to provide for it, and encourage its growth.

Beyond these reasons, we want the Connellsville road finished, first, to develop the resources of the southwestern counties of the State, and second, to give us a shorter If Philadelphia had ever been truly alive to her own interests, she would have seen not only the policy, but the necessity, of two competing lines to that city from this. A comprehension of this necessity would Independent Company, to build the South-ern Pennsylvania road, which would have opened up to her a rich country, as well as a new outlet to the West. But instead of that she threw that route into the hands o the Pennsylvania road, which has practically closed it, and now, when there is danger that the trade which would have poured into Philadelphia over this batte will be diverted to Baltimore, she cries out like many others who have trifled away

BIOGRAPHIES.

the reason why !]

CORNELIUS O'DOWD, in the nineteenth o his series of articles in Blackwood's Maga-tine "Upon men and women, and other Things in General," has some quaint and eaustic criticisms on late Biographies of fame men, which are deserving of citation He defines two sorts of objectionable me morial mongers.

1. Those who imitate the wretches who strip the dead on the field of battle; who portray their hero in his hour of sickness and depression; in his times of exaggerated gulety and folly; in his moments of excited vanityand success. "Was the fatal marksman in the mainton as terrible an enemy of poor Nelson as the biographer who lately wrote his life at Dresden." "Had the Great Emperor such a foein all his fiery career, a that-Doctor who chronicled his late years a St. Helena?" "Oh evil generations of gosst. Helenar "On evil generations of gos-sips! Why will you revel in your neigh-bor's short-comings?" "Was there ever yot that man whom Biography could not make little?" "Take him who deals with the greatest themes—with the highest powers of mind—and has he not his ills and ents, his days of depression, his season of fretfulness and impatience, and his time of distrust and disbelief? Is it of these w cle of the words he uttered in his pain or the bitter syllables that broke from him in his passion."

2. "Those who hold a brief from their hero, and make him out a monster of unen to the choice. I had rather have my 'life taken' by the former than by these."
In this country Washington has uni-mly been depicted after this fushion; FRANKLIN frequently; and now Lincoln's humanity is suffering by the same process. CARPENTER's series of sketches in the Independent may be taken as a sample,

"CAMPRELL." said Lord LYNDHURST, IN ferring to the Lives of the Chancellors, "has added one more to the terrors of death; for if I do not outlive him, he will write my

We have a friend who combines the morfil austerities of a Puritan, with the intel-lectual freedom of a Philosopher. A scion of a house of colonial and revolutionary fame, who blends the polished carriage and manners of a gentleman with the debanched morals of a cavaller, met this friend on the street one day and accosted him: "sir," saidhe "I acknowledge your virtues, though I do not imitate them; but allow me to say your character would be mor tolerable if you indulged in a few levities Gozernor Curtin wintimate personal friends doton of his behata as has been given he pabnottrough the newspapers. They represent that he really was very miserable when he went away. A gentleman told me that when he shook hands with the Governor an hour hefore his departure for Cucs, he had serious doubts whether he should ever welcome him back after. Recent letters from him state that he is improving, tuthot by hay meany with rapidity. He physician is not witting to take the responsibility of recommending his return before the coming but legath for mild

It is currently reported here that the Governor will roturn at all events, by the middle of February. That he desires to is unquestionable, but that he will is by no means certain:

Truly; and why not? Have not the people as good a right to go to New York, if they want to, as to go to Philadelphia? It is a crime in them to want to "get into New York"? Must the power of the Supremo Court be invoked to prement them going to New York, without first going to Philadelphia? That appears to be Mr. Cettler's perion. He sets cut with treating the idea of trying to "get into New York" as being an enormity—one adress as that of Oliver Train, was in the eyes of the astonished band, when he asked for "more," Philadelphia will do well to moderate her none in this regard.
