THE members of the Allegheny Councils are entitled to our most hearty thanks for the almost unanimous vote given to the Gazette in the caucus held last night. Taken in connection with a similar vote given us in the Pittsburgh Councils, we cannot but feel extremely grateful for the endorsement given us by our political friends.

THE COUNTY CONVENTION.

The Republican County Convention, held to-day, elected delegates to the State Convention instructed in favor of our townsman, Gen. J. K. MOORHEAD, for Governor. The resolutions have the genuine ring, and show decisively where the Republicans of Allegheny stand on the great question of Reconstruction. There is nothing "conservative" about them.

AN EXAMPLE.

When the British took possession of India, it was a prosperous country. As Mr. CAMPBELL phrased it, "under the native princes, India was a paying country." There was combined action on the part of the people for supplying their mutual wants.

From the commencement of British rule a policy has been pursued having for its object the destruction of manufactures in the peninsula. This policy has been successful.

Mr. MCCULLOCH in his Commercial Dictionary says, "notwithstanding the extreme cheapness of labor in India, and the excellence to which the natives had long attained, the wonderful genius of British machinists, and the admirable skill of British workmen, and the immensity of British capital, have far more than countervailed the apparently insuperable drawback of highways, and have enabled British manufactures to bear down all opposition, and to triumph over the cheaper labor, contiguous material, and the traditional art of India." In other words the British have certain advantages for manufacturing greatly superior on the whole to the advantages possessed by the Indians. Having the power in its hands, the British government establishes free trade between those distant provinces and the mother country. The result was precisely as foreseen: the Indian manufactures were prostrated. Even with the aid of cheaper labor and nearness to material and market, they could not compete with the improved machinery and larger capitalist Britain.

But, insists the free trader, India found its compensations in cheaper fabrics and higher prices for raw material. That, to be sure, is the theory; and if it holds true in practice free trade is not the worst thing in the world. What are the actual results?

That the whole people, men, women and children, are compelled to accept work in the field, producing commodities to be exported in their rudest state. The internal commerce of the country steadily declines, while the external commerce does not amount to fifty cents per head.

But this is not the worst view of the picture. SAYS CHAPMAN, in his book on Cotton and Commerce of India, "Vast heaps of humanity, festering in compulsory idleness, encumber the soil of India." And this is the inevitable result where the workshops are closed throughout any country. Wages, that were low before have been still lower still. One reason is the redundancy of labor thrown upon a few pursuits. The other is the established fact that when a particular article has to be transported from the place of production to market, the wages of the producer diminish in proportion to the distance the article is transported. In other words, the producer has to pay the cost of getting to market.

This is precisely what the British manufacturers and government mean everywhere where they talk of free trade. They mean a system of the interchange of commodities which gives them the opportunity to weaken and break up the habit of associated labor essential to successful manufactures on the part of their rivals, to force other people back upon the ruder and least remunerating branches of industry, to sink them into comparative poverty, and to bind them in a commercial vassalage from which there is no escape.

Just now the British manufacturers are displeased with the prosperity and extension of many corresponding branches of industry in this country. Through their factors and agents they are preparing to operate in Congress with a view to securing such a reduction of the impost duties as will check this development. It does look as if they would succeed. The manufacturing interest has become formidable; so much capital is embarked in it; so large a share of the population derive their subsistence, their competency, and their respectability therefrom; and so great are the reciprocal benefits accruing to all other callings; that members of Congress, are not, in general, inclined to put it in peril. The nation begins to feel that through manufactures is the way to boundless prosperity and to commercial supremacy abroad.

GEN. GRANT, it seems, is opposed to withdrawing the troops from the Southern States; notwithstanding which the troops are being steadily withdrawn.

A few weeks since, the lightest word of GEN. GRANT was regarded as authoritative and conclusive by certain presses and politicians, and no man was allowed to question his ipse dixit. How is it now? If he was such unquestionable authority upon another subject, why is he not on this, especially as upon this question he is, of all men, the best qualified to judge? Why do those who would cram him down our throats less than a month since, as an infallible witness, set him aside now, as a nobody, and disregard his testimony upon a military question, of which, from his position, he is the only fit judge?

RESOLUTIONS have been introduced into the Kentucky legislature declaring that while that State reserves to herself the right to complain of the constitutional amendment abolishing slavery "she will submit to it without revolt." That assurance removes a load of apprehension from our hearts. We had feared that that great State would refuse to submit, and that the country would consequently be compelled to forego the benefits anticipated from that amendment; but being now assured that she will not revolt, the world can go on having diurnal revolutions and come as many divers games of that sort as it likes. Oh! how thankful we are to know that Kentucky will not revolt!

TEMPEST IN A TEAPOT.—The National Intelligencer threatens an insurrection in the District of Columbia if the negro suffrage bill is passed by Congress. It says:

"When a people declare by a vote against negro suffrage, that they are not disposed to admit this race, at this time, to such franchise, then any attempt of oligarchy or despotism to violate this will, is simply such oppression as appeals for revolutionary redress of all legal forms of relief and protection fail."

If the people of the District do not rally to the support of exclusive white suffrage with any more vigor than they did to the support of the nation in the hour of its peril, it will not take more than one regiment of colored troops to put down the threatened rebellion.

INCREASE OF THE STANDING ARMY.

Two facts stand in apparent antagonism. While one class call for the withdrawal of the military force from the Southern States and the rapid disbandment of all the volunteer regiments, under the plea that this is a government of opinion, another class insist on a considerable augmentation of the regular army as indispensable, and this under the plea that force is requisite to hold opinion in due subordination. A bill for such increase is actually before Congress. And yet this antagonism, when the essence of the matter is reached, is more in appearance than reality.

All governments are based on opinion and force. At bottom, there is not much difference in the admixture of these two elements in different governments. One nation takes the autocratic form and another the democratic, because of the difference of opinion existing between them, and what Opinion demands Force maintains.

In the Southern States, Opinion, among the voting and ruling classes, has been steadily growing adverse to republican principles and forms for a period of thirty years at least. But for the intervention of Force from other portions of the Union, and in which a different Opinion prevailed Opinion would have accomplished a revolution in the South, without creating the necessity for a blow.

That Opinion exists there entirely unchanged, Withdraw the pressure of Force existing in the Federal armies; extirpate the terror of Force which those armies have inspired; and abrogate all probability of the return of those armies in case of renewed resistance, and Opinion will take the Southern States out of the Union once more in a month.

Force is necessary to hold the people of the South to subordination under the government, and to protect the newly acquired rights of the emancipated bondmen. It is requisite that a certain amount of Force be present in those States. A diversity of judgment exists as to the exact amount required. But there is almost unanimous concurrence in the belief that some is indispensable. That reserve of Force which is known to exist in the nation will do the rest. It is not necessary that a power should actually be on the spot to be felt and heeded.

Gen. Grant thinks a large increase of the regular army desirable. Some Statesmen concur in that opinion. But certain facts ought to be considered. Before the war it was found impossible to keep a few regiments up to the mark of effective strength. Men could do better than go into the army. It was thought when the rebellion collapsed that no trouble would be experienced in filling the old regiments and those created during the war, from among the disbanded volunteers. The love of military adventure has generally been satiated. The regiments of the regular army are not full; and what is more, they can not be filled. Young men are weary of the camp and all that pertains to military life. The great majority who went into the service did so from patriotic impulses. They feel that they have discharged their duty and accomplished their mission. In the army no hopes invite, no ambition allures. In ordinary employments wages are high, and the prospects of competency, if not of wealth, most encouraging. Hence instead of more men wanting to get into the army, the men who are in want to get out. The feeling against remaining in the service is so prevalent and intense that discipline is relaxed. Many of the regiments are little better than armed mobs.

What, then, will be the effect of authorizing new regiments? Certainly, not to increase the effective numbers of the army; but to lengthen the list of officers and to increase the burden of taxation. This is all that can come of more regiments. All the men who can be enlisted will not fill the regiments now existing. The present array of regulars with such colored regiments as can be retained for fort duty, are sufficient for every purpose that can be subserved by the creation of additional staffs of officers with few or no men under them. The tax-payers and the government creditors are alike interested to resist the increase of the number of regular regiments.

ADHERING TO THEIR OLD FRIENDS.—The Mining Journal, a large and able English sheet, London, Dec. 16, says:

"The formal constitution of a Free-trade League in the United States is a very hopeful sign. It is hard for dwellers in another land to judge of the prospects of such an organization, but it has clearly many things in its favor. The representatives from the South are almost sure to vote for it, and it will be strange if the West does not. * * Should these anticipations prove true, we may expect a very large trade with that country."

If is from the South that England expects the votes that shall carry out her anti-American policy, and the Free Trade League, to effect the same purpose, is willing to grant complete protection to the South. These three and their willing co-operators of the democratic party, form the quadruple alliance which is already pressing its measures in Congress, and which will require prompt, firm and vigilant action on the part of the friends of protection, whether in that body or not, to defeat. So far the advocates of free trade have shown themselves to be more active and better organized than their opponents; and it is certain that they have more of the sinews of war at their command.

WE publish, to-day, the comments of the London Daily News upon the diplomatic correspondence relative to the Shenandoah claims. The Times had a similar article, and this extract from the News we take as a fair exhibit of the opinion of the London press. It will be seen that, although the correspondence is regarded as closed, the English papers are by no means satisfied with the position of their government. They have the shrewdness to see that the ground taken by Earl Russell and the Earl of Clarendon will justify any other nation in following British example the moment Great Britain is again involved in war; and that, in such an event, the entire commerce of England can be swept from the seas, and its destruction be justified by the arguments set forth by Great Britain in this correspondence.

UNTOMBED DEMI-GODS.—A Southern poet has found a new name for the young Southern chivalry. Hear him:

"You may talk of peace with the Yankee,
For Heaven hath mercy and rods;
But not where numbers our young chivalry,
The untomb'd demi-gods!"

If the demi-gods are untombed for want of money to bury them, a small contribution can soon be raised to put them underground. There cannot be many of them; and perhaps an appeal to Jove, and the other gods might be successful in getting them decent sepulture. The dwellers on Olympus should be ashamed to let their offspring lie thus unconsigned.

THE CALAMITY OF THE SOUTH.—The Washington correspondent of the Richmond Republic is grieved to see the South championed by the Northern Copperheads. He says:

"Long predicted that a mischief would be done the South in keeping her representatives out of Congress, inasmuch as it would enable the Democrats to become her champions. This evil has come about precisely as is feared. The two men in the North who, of all others, most damage a cause by their advocacy of it, are Daniel W. Voorhees, of Indiana, and Andrew J. Rogers, of New Jersey; and yet in the few days that have elapsed since Congress has re-assembled, both of these gentlemen have championed the South."

THE New York Tribune lately ventured the opinion that St. Louis, in 1900, would be the great city of the West. The year 1900 is a good way off, and there is abundant time between this and then for that city to make herself worthy of the distinction prophetically awarded her; but so long as she permits steamboats to be crushed to pieces by the dozen, annually, at her wharf, without taking any steps to protect them from such casualties, so long she will postpone the day of her coming greatness.

GENERAL NEWS.

THE House special Committee on the Bankrupt Law, fixed on nothing, after report the bill agreed upon, which is substantially that passed in the House last year, with the two senate amendments, and a few unimportant changes. Another amendment, applying that no bankrupt should be discharged unless by consent of a majority of creditors in number and value, unless he pay fifty cents on the dollar, was adopted prospectively, to go into effect one year after date. The bill, as it will be reported, meets the approval of the leading merchants of New York, including some who have heretofore been opposed to a bankrupt law.

THE Stark County (O.) Republican says: On Tuesday, as the 12:30 train approached the depot, Mr. David Reichbaum, accompanied by his grey haired father, drove their team on the track immediately in front of the engine. The engine struck the horses, carried team and wagon a considerable distance, throwing both men out. The young man fell with his neck directly on the track and had under the cars. The wheels passed over his neck, tearing it almost entirely off the body, and of course causing instant death. The old man, though somewhat hurt by his fall, was not seriously injured.

THE Gazette, Illinois, Republican says a boy by the name of White, aged about seven years living to that city, was accidentally shot and killed by his little brother, on Wednesday. The boys were playing with a gun in the garret of the house, when by some means it was discharged, the contents entering the body of the little boy, and killing him almost instantly.

THE WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT, of the Boston Traveller, who is usually well informed, declares that the President has not only not used his patronage to put his own schemes through Congress, but solemnly asserts that he does not intend to do anything of the kind.

A STEPMOTHER in Marengo, N. Y., lately crowned a long series of shocking abuses perpetrated upon a boy six years old, by locking him in the house and absenting herself for three days. When she returned with her husband, the boy was dead. The neighbors went in and found the little creature lying on his heap of rags, nearly naked and frozen quite stiff.

IT will deeply pain the many friends of Governor Morton, of Indiana, to learn that a letter has just been received from him, written just as he arrived at Queenstown, in which he writes that his voyage was a pleasant one, and he says: "I have eaten but one meal since I went aboard the steamer, and that was the evening I left. My limbs are very weak, much weaker than when I started."

THE Cincinnati street railroad companies in the effort to enhance their gains, have not only cut off omnibuses, including the press and their own officers, but actually dismissed their conductors, whom they pay but so a week, to pay their own fares when they ride home after going off duty, and still they expect conductors to be honest.

THE wolves and panthers have multiplied to such an extent in "John Brown's tract," in New York, that they not only trail the deer in packs, but even have the audacity to "put in an occasional appearance" in barnyards on the border. Hunters return from the woods with doleful faces and no game, except perhaps a mangled carcass or two of venison abandoned by the wolves.

FROM the annual account of the whale fishery published in the New Bedford Standard we learn that the profits were large last year, notwithstanding the piratical depredations of the rebels, and that the fleet will be increased this summer.

AN EFFICIENT RAILWAY.—The London Metropolitan (underground) Railway is 7½ miles long, and cost over $14,000,000—more than two and a quarter million dollars—per mile, a ten at that enormous cost, it pays a dividend of seven per cent.

A correspondent of the Detroit Free Press, writing from Three Rivers, Michigan, states that the amount realized from the sale of the out of peppermint made in that village last year is nearly $60,000, the yield being about thirty thousand pounds.

THE fortune left by King Leopold is estimated at fifteen millions of dollars. The will is dated 1857. M. Van Praet, Grand Chamberlain and intimate friend of the King, was appointed by him executor of several of its testamentary provisions.

SIX years ago, a lady in Norwich, Conn., planted three peach-stones in a box. Only one of them came up, but now from the three branches of the tree she has gathered three varieties of peaches.

IT is now ascertained beyond a doubt that three-fourths of the money sent by the friends of the Union soldiers who were captives in rebel prisons was stolen by the keepers thereof.
