WHY A MONOPOLY! A friend asks us why we speak of the itennsylvania Railroad as a monopoly, that road being only three hundred and fifty-six miles long, whilst there are several thous-ands miles of railroad in the State. We answer, First, because it is the only through line traversing the State from east to west; and Second, because it has obtained control of all the other supposed available routes from here to the Spsquehanna, thus shutting out the possibility of competition There are, from this point eastward, three direct routes, over which a railroad is prac ticable. The first in the route now occup Somerset, Bedford, Fulton, Franklin and umberland; and the third is the northern route up the Allegheny and its tributaries to the water-sted which connects the head-waters of that aircum with the head-waters waters of the sections, and thence along the of the Susquehanns, and thence along the latter to Harrisburg.

So long as these northern and southern outes were with to us, we had the chance put section; me or both eventually occupied by lines competing with the middle rante. PREE TRADE LEAGUE.

It was recently charged by a leading cost-ern journal that the Free Trade League of this country was supplied, in large part, erchants. The free trade organs denie this impeachment most roundly. But their which contributions for the same purpose were proved to have been received from Europe, and the names of the contributors, with the respective sums, fully detailed.

More than this. The Free Trade League was challenged to publish the names of its ors, and so close the discussion. This the League is not inclined to do, because of the inevitable exposure that would follow:
Everybody knows that the Free Trade

What they have done in time past, and what accords with their present interests, it is fair to presume they are doing now. are doing now.

Mr. DEMING, of Connecticut, in his late speech on reconstruction, said that throughout the four years of the war we had treated the Confederate States as a government, and having conquered them have the right to treat them as conquered provinces. Upon this the Philadolphia News remarks: "A man fit to be a representative of a hundred thousand people in the Congress of the United States ought to know the different power of a large number of men in arms, and recognizing them as an independent nutton having an established government."

And a man fit to be the editor of a news-paper ought to know the difference between treating with a de facto government and recognizing it as an independent nation. "The belligerent power of a large number of men in arms," is of itself a de facto government, and that is, all that Mr. Demise ontended for, to-wit: That we treated with the South throughout the war as an actual government, and having conquered that provernment, its constituent parts are at our mercy. It by no means follows that because we treated with the Confederate lates as an actual government, we there-

THE New York Times, in alluding to the hanging of Mrs. GRINDER, says "that not less than a thousand men have suffered death by the gallows in this country, within the present century, but within the same time until the execution of Mrs. Surratt, but one woman had been subjected to the death penalty; and if we remember rightly, this, with another one who was hung during the Revolution, constitutes the entire number of female executions since our country gained its independence." The Times is mistaken. Mrs. GRINDER is the second woman who has been hung in this city within the last twenty years, one CHARLOTTE JONES hav-ign been executed here for murder within that time. Besides that we can recall the case of Mrs. RUNKLE, who was hung in Oneida county, New York, not many years since, and we have no doubt there were many other cases. There is a Spanish law by which a young man having an income of fifty dollairs per month and wishing to marry a young lody, a minor and mable to obtain her parent's consent, can have her deposited in the house of a motual friend till the marriage coremony is performed. Well, a young Cuban having made a passage to New York and lack with the family of one of our American residents, fell in love with the daughter and is determined to marry her, if possible, fi spite of the opposition of the parents. An order has been issued to have the damsel deposited, but is still in abswance, the father having applied to the Captain General through his counsel.
