THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS.

Every thoughtful person comprehends that whenever harmony between the executive branches of government...

But the harmony of which we speak is not always obtainable...

After the closing of the war the soldier of the armies, the President had two courses open before him...

Having taken the whole matter into his own hands, he propounded conditions on which the Union should be restored...

When these conditions were accepted, the President was bound to accept of them...

At the opening of Congress he went as far as to maintain the position...

It is not to be denied that the President was bound to accept of them...

to them everything. They have apprehensions of severity on the part of Congress...

THE WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT OF THE BOSTON JOURNAL.

The real counselors of the President are not now outside the head of the Executive...

The damage in Wisconsin. A telegram from Madison to the Chicago Times...

The Atlantic Pacific Railroad. The return of the Atlantic Pacific Railroad...

While these corporations continue to act in their own interests...

It is not to be denied that the President was bound to accept of them...
