

The United States District Judge at Memphis has decided that since Proclamation a Rebel cannot plead his parole, given on the final surrender of the Rebel troops, as a bar to his trial, on the ground that as peace has been formally proclaimed by the President of the United States, courts of law can no longer take cognizance of paroles, captures, surrenders, orders, and other military documents or proceedings, but is remanded and committed to the trial of the civil law, and the unhappy prisoner must stand his trial, and must find his only defense. That Peace Proclamation may therefore accomplish more than was intended by its author.

The Reconstruction Committee will bring forward in the course of a few days an amendment to the Constitution in regard to representation, which is to be taken up by the settlement of the whole question of the admission of representatives of rebel States, which will receive the sanction of two-thirds of both Houses of Congress.

Secretary McCullough has decided to destroy all records of the War, which were received for collection or otherwise, as the first step towards his policy of contraction.

The Post does not want CLYMER interposed upon the Railroad question. That would be the very best reason why he should be interposed.
