The Pittsburgh Gazette.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 3, 1866.

The Soldiers' Olympe Convention which assembled at Harrisburg on the 1st instant, was in keeping with all other kind conventions a miserable farce. When will the Confederates learn that the soldiers have no love for their country? In every case where soldiers (friendly or unfriendly) have been convened together they have done so in a numerical force and the meetings have been a dismal farce. Soldiers know their duty as well now as they did during the rebellion. They cannot kill the rod which smites them; neither can they sustain the men who refused their punishment and aid, while they faced the terrors of the law of their government. The Soldiers' Convention of Pittsburgh, a terrible farce, has been enacted. They have not yet recovered from its shock, although nearly every district of the State has put forth its best efforts to muster a squad of soldiers to endorse the Democratic cause. The Democrats made a grand misfortune during the rebellion, in extending their sympathies to the South, and the result of the picket lines, and they could not expect the brave boys in blue to wheel into their columns, in order to elevate to honor and power the northern rebels who had beaten them their hard task while facing the foe.

Congress having adjourned, it is next in order for the Representatives, especially for such of them as have been re-elected, to meet with their constituents in popular assemblies, and make known of what has been done in the national council, what failed of being accomplished, and for what reasons. The enemies of the Congressional plan of reconstruction have been so diligent and unscrupulous in misrepresenting the temper and conduct of Congress, that in addition to the ordinary means for conference with the people by the Representatives, special means of great potency exist. Let the Republican Congressmen meet the people, face to face, and present their views to the fact for consideration. The fuller and more searching the discussion, the better and more enduring will be the results.

The soldiers of the world are now upon each and hold a mass meeting in each of the counties of the Commonwealth. We have so often witnessed the virtues of public discussion that we have unlimited faith in the efficacy of that instrumentality. We are not charmed with the idea of a still.

The House Bill, amending the Neutralities Laws failed in the Senate. Since then advice from London state that the British Ministry had called the attention of Parliament to the utility of revising their Neutralities Law. A bill was introduced, a revision, which might do justice to the Confederates, to the part of the Atlantic, to the payment for supplies upon our commerce committed by the Anglo-Confederate privates. That done, if the British government desire to proceed in the work of reconstruction, it will be necessary to wait until the war is over. The bill was introduced, and passed by the House of Commons, and received Royal Assent, July 2, 1866. It is now in the hands of the Queen, containing a few alterations, and is to be sent to the House of Lords, No. 12 Wood street, consisting in part of the same, and a few additions. The bill is to be introduced in the House of Commons, and the Queen assents to it immediately. The Queen is to receive a salute in honor of the bill's passage.
