IN THE admission of Tennessee, the Republican majorities in the two Houses of Congress have practically rejected the alligations that they are attempting to reduce the whole of the Southern States to their former condition of dependence.
What we have done is to declare that the rebel and secessionists in the other non-revolted States—Nor can it be maintained with any show of fairness that the conditions they exact are harsh and unreasonable. The majority require a constitutional provision that the leaders in the rebel states shall be disallowed of their members in the national government and trust the government in the hands of the Confederacy.

This is easily less than the truth.
Johnson has been compelled to make executive decisions which conflict with a strong and popular sense of justice and equity.
The most recent was the most extreme known to us, and ought to be published as such. He instituted his executive and claimed his right to accept or reject. We are still in the field of realistic politics, but we are not in the world of the Phœnix, and we are far from it.

In the President's view, an immense majority of the Union would be satisfied with a Union in which the rebels were left in peace, but Johnson was the most extreme known to us, and ought to be published as such. He instituted his exec-
