

THE PHILADELPHIA CONVENTION. In the account of the doings of the Congressional Convention in the Twentieth District, the name of Benjamin F. King, Esq., one of the conferees for Armstrong county, was omitted. The omission was not made by the Secretary, but by the typesetter.

ANY MAN rests under the impression that the Philadelphia Convention, which is to-day, is in any proper sense an independent deliberative assembly, he may as well desist at once. The great majority of the members have been packed, with a view to a particular result, which will be brought about by absolute certainty. The Southern delegations are under the control of the President. His hands between them and the House of Representatives and the loyal masses of the country. Whatever he enacts they must stand by; and he is not disposed to hard on them. Doubtless the whole program has been settled at Washington.
