DEATH OF THE DEMOCRATIC

We erred in saying that the Democracy of New York had managed to swallow up the few followers of the President outside of that organization. In the proceeding of "the Democratic and Johnson National Union Committee" who recently met at Albany, the Democratic name was dropped

I told you that our pride and our boast, was that this was a government of law, that it was our security, that it did not deside alow, the Drep Scort decision, and the Nebraska bit! were monstrosities which trice again; and had not carry, and in 1860 it broke down. Still it retained some vitality, and made sunory spasmodic efforts to rise again; and had the great rebellion been a success it might have succeeded. But the bad success of that great movement of professed democrats left no hope for the party. All cohesion was gone, and the debris of it and the rebellion lay all around in disorganized contusion. Seeing this plentifut supply of loose materials, composed mainly of copperheads and rebels—some with merely enough brains to follow their leaders and hat negroes; others whose wrecked fortunes as traitors had rendered them desprente—a leve enterprising gentlemen conceived the idea of building up a new party—a conservative party—that is a party in which as much as possible of the suite.

I does not depend upon the law, the succeeded on the will of the Executive, whether such things shall not be; it does not depend upon the law, the sales of our American artists, who thus disposed of most of their sums, subjects for the party when the way and it that have the private sales of our American artists, who thus disposed of most of their sums, when the private and the past three years, and the sal party-a conservative party-that is a party on the ticket-really we hardly know on the ticket—really we hardly know what to call it—the ticket put forth by the men who support the President's policy, with chieffing and shift and draw their inspiration from Senator Cowax. In Andrew Jourson, that Esingular enterprising political engineers, SEWARD, COWAN, DOOL!TTLE, the BLAIR family, and others, with a large number of co-partners from the ranks of the leading rebels, found an agent exactly adapted to their purpose. The late Philadelphia Convention was the result; and the first and almost the only thing they did there was to strangle the poor old party that had been worked almost to death in their hard and wicked service, and give it a hasty burial in a nameless grave. Fearing that VALLANDIGHAM, FERNAN. Do Wood and one or two other democratic chiefs might be disposed to fight for the poor old thing, they were thurst out of the Convention. Then the deed was done and by way of funeral procession, South Carolina personified by some dozen rebels and Massachusetts caricatured by the same number of recreant sens, marched arm in arm. "Alas! poor Yourick! "

Congress, at its last session, made an appropriation of ten thousand dollars to build a monument in honor of Admandal Lincoln. This manifestation of respect and honor to the memory of a President, stainless in all the relations of private life, and whose public virtues brought on him the hand of an assassin, is made the occasion for an outpouring of vituperation on the part of many Democratic journals. This outburst of rage and abuse is not shared in solely by journals that have consider appropriate for subtractions of the propriate of the propriate Congress, at its last session, made an ap-This outburst of rage and abuse is not shared in solely by journals that have carried a reputation for subterraneanism, but is participated in by others which make professions of decency, if not of dignity. While European opinion, recovering from the misapprehension and prejudice under which it labored four years ago, is rapidly coming to recognize in Mr. Lincoln not only eminent purity, but also conspicuous ability, his political opponents at home allow their curiosities towards him to be intensified by reason of that halo of remorse which gathers about his memory. This is a fresh illustration of the fact that partizen hatreds and jealousies are less under the control of reason and justice than any other passions by which the minds of men are agitated.

A like position awaits Lincoln. His early friends can afford to wait the verdict posterity.

A CALL has been issued for a Convention of Soldlers and Sailors who served the national cause during the rebellion, and now support the President's Policy, to meet at Cleveland, September 17th. Many of the men concerned in this movement have good military records behind them. They were brave and skilful officers. As citizens they have the same right as their fellows to follow what political party they will. they have the same right as their fellows to follow what political party they will.

SENATOR COWAN'S SPEECH.

The speech of this gentleman at the City (says the Woccster Palladium) has suddenly changed his luxurious style of living for one more unpretentious and humble, for one his views. We have looked over the report, but can find nothing that rises to the dignity of argument. We quote a single paragraph as a sample, and as our justification for taking no further notice of it:

It is some thing appalling, even now, to peruse the political pamphlets through which the destruction of his character and fame was sought; and the columns of Duane's Ausoror excite the disgust and indignation of every reader. Not a few of these libels emanated from the graceful and powerful pen of Mr. Jefferson, even while he held a seat in the Cabinet of the First President.
