DEPART OF OUR COMMERCIAL. When the rebellion opened the commercial classes of England saw they had an opportunity for striking a powerful blow at the rivalry they were experiencing from this country.

When the rebellion opened the commercial classes of England saw they had an opportunity for striking a powerful blow at the rivalry they were experiencing from this country. Hence the rivalry which they threw capital in the building, equipment and manning of Confederate privateers. They did their work effectively. American commerce after encountering serious losses, almost absolutely ceased to move.

It is manifest that whatever damage may have been inflicted by the Confederates, other and totally different inducements are operating to retard that recovery which is most desirable. What are these causes?

The commercial classes, and the journals in their interest, have been endeavoring to show that the tariff is a protection to the discriminations of the existing tariff in favor of domestic manufacturers.

It will be seen by the foregoing correspondence that Mr. Williams disavows any intention, in any disagreement as to the course of casting my imputation upon the loyalty, honor or legislative integrity of his colleague, General Moorhead.

Washington, December 17, 1866. J. K. Moorhead, Dear Sir: I have your copy of the article in the Gazette of the 12th inst. which is published in relation to the tariff.
