STATESMANSHIP.

MR. SUMNER is a radical. So is MR. WADE. MR. SUMNER has the most scholarship; MR. WADE has the most vigorous common sense. MR. SUMNER is essentially a Reformer, with a dash of speculative Philosophy in his organization. MR. WADE is a Statesman, and would be glad to have governmental matters conform to his ideal standard, but knows he cannot, and therefore inclines to do the best he can under given circumstances, hoping, through argument and persuasion, and all of the age, to do better after awhile.

This explains why MR. SUMNER refuses to vote for the admission of the Territories of Colorado and Nebraska as States, until the constitutions they have respectively adopted shall be amended so as to allow blacks to vote on the same conditions as whites, while MR. WADE, who is quite as favorable to impartial suffrage as that gentleman, avows his readiness to vote for their admission without such alterations of the proposed fundamental laws. Public opinion, as to suffrage, has so far ripened, that a bill has passed both Houses abolishing discrimination on account of color in the District of Columbia. It has not so matured as to enforce the same principles upon Territories applying for admission as States. MR. SUMNER thinks it wisest to do nothing until he can do precisely what he desires, and to take the chances of all the mischiefs that may result from inaction. In defeating BLAINE'S Amendment, at the last session, he followed the same Policy, and missed the opportunity for accomplishing much good. MR. WADE would gladly incorporate universal suffrage into the Constitutions of all inchoate States, but he apprehends there are not enough members of Congress like-minded to do that thing over the inevitable veto of the President. He sees, moreover, many advantages which will flow from the immediate creation of these two Territories into States. Their Senators, Representatives, and Legislatures may on several important questions, which cannot fail soon to press for settlement, turn the doubtful scale the right way.

But, MR. SUMNER does not vindicate his consistency any better than MR. WADE does his, by going to this point, and there stopping. MR. SUMNER believes that the right of women to vote and hold office is precisely as clear and indisputable as the right of men, white or black. When, therefore, he assumes to stand on the line of absolute and immutable principle, he strangely mistakes in contending simply for male suffrage. Consistency as imperatively demands he should refuse to make States of Colorado and Nebraska until women share equally with men in political privileges within their respective boundaries. The position he occupies is open to the same impeachment, from his own standpoint, as the position of MR. WADE. He gains nothing on the score of consistency, and sacrifices many utilities which he could readily obtain.

This affords another demonstration of the fact that ability to discriminate and handle ideas, does not make a statesman. It is much more to the purpose in statesmanship, to intuitively detect the drift of events; to perceive intuitively the direction, and with what force, popular feeling and opinion is setting; and to dexterously handle men and affairs. So long as MR. SUMNER was in an apparently hopeless minority, and had no actual responsibility for the way public matters existed, he served a valuable purpose. His impassioned philippics against wrong, and his glittering enforcements of the right, contributed largely to the quickening of the public conscience. Natural genius and long habit, in this way, conspired to make him an iconoclast. He became strong to pull down. But a period has arrived when a different order of ability is required. The work of demolition has been so far accomplished that it is needful to begin building anew. MR. SUMNER has shown he can pull down. Can he build up? Is he a genuine architect? It is certainly no part of statesmanship to refuse to do the good that can be done, because something else, esteemed desirable, cannot be reached at once.

UNDER AN ECLIPSE.

Six years ago the sun of colossal reputation in Europe was that of NAPOLEON III. It unmeasurably overtopped all others. He was held to be endowed with a sagacity something more than human. Whatever he did seemed to be done with an inscrutable mastery over men and events. No failures cast their shadows upon his progress. That great reputation, attained by many years of unbroken and magnificent success, has passed under eclipse. It is no longer what it was. A series of disastrous enterprises, the development of other individuals, into equal or even greater conspicuity, the success of rivals involving his humiliation, have all conspired to reduce his fame from what it was.

The Mexican expedition, never popular, and demanding large sacrifices of money and life, is drawing to an ignominious conclusion. Undertaken upon false premises, prosecuted without brilliancy, and ending in a shameful retreat, it has detracted largely from the general judgment of the Emperor's, penetration and fertility of resources, and soured the mass of his subjects. Nor was this relieved by the subordinate and sinister part he played in the late Germanic war. Clearly overreached and thrown off his guard in the Prussian negotiations which preceded it, he was amazed and confounded by the extent and rapidity of the military movements which made it illustrious. In his bewilderment he showed an eagerness to participate in the fray, but this was attended by a fatal irresolution, as to which side to espouse and what pretexts to avow. In the mood he let the opportunity of interference slip, and ended in making demands for territorial compensations which failed on pure assumptions, and in being refused in a manner which gave the civilized world to understand he was no longer regarded as the arbiter of destiny among the nations. Then he was constrained to withdraw his troops from Rome. The intense longing for national unity among the Italians, and the coalition between Prussia and Italy, gave token of eventualities for which he was not prepared, and from which he conceived it prudent to make his escape. With his retirement, so far as human discernment can penetrate, a cause for which he periled much, and by which he prided largely, is irrecoverably lost. These events, distasteful to the pride of the French people, have seriously shaken his hold upon popular confidence. This is plainly manifested in the sullenness with which the project to reorganize the army has been received. It may be granted that the provisions of the project are harsh and objectable. But six years ago not a murmur of discontent would have followed the promulgation of the scheme. When the masses are in a humor to find fault, nothing suits them better than an opportunity. NAPOLEON now retreats before his own people. Is this the first of a succession of humiliations that shall end—who can tell where?

In view of the embarrassments which press upon the country many business men are unwisely seeking relief in a farther increase of irredeemable paper money. No relief can be found in that way. The trouble is not that there is too little of what passes for money; but altogether too much. A dollar greenback or National bank note represents no definite and tangible value. The disproportionate use of paper has unsettled prices, so that the sum demanded for a thing does not correspond to the labor required to produce it. Deliverance must be had from this evil, and we are apt to think that the speediest is the best. An Irishman is reputed to have admonished a cannoneer to touch off his gun easy. No proof exists to establish the fact that the injunction was obeyed. If statesmen and financiers have ever managed to recover from extreme paper inflation to the substantial bottom of coin, without inflicting serious strain upon the community, the record of the anomalous exploit has not come down to these times. It commonly happens that about as many fortunes are shivered in getting down as were made in climbing up. The point to be aimed at is to save as many men as possible. All this is generally perceived. But each man naturally wants to be among the favored. There are fewer persons ready to lead a financial forlorn hope than a military one. Here, self-preservation becomes the first law of nature. And this is well. But it sometimes happens that in floundering about to escape a particular dilemma worse evils are encountered than would have been met in putting on a bold face, and confronting at once what was inevitable.

EDITORIAL BREVITIES.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Tribune, writing from Constantinople, November 23, says that, under the teachings of the American missionaries, who have been laboring among the Armenian Christians of the Turkish Empire for the past thirty years, and who have carried the Bible into every village, these people have become convinced that many of their rites and practices as a church are contrary to the plain teachings of the scriptures. Thousands are combining to compel the church to renounce these errors, and go back to the simple teachings of the Bible. All the young men, it is said, are joining in this movement. The writer speaks of the movement as "a striking evidence of the success of the American missionaries in bringing this people back to the Bible as their only sure guide."

THE recent assassination of an old German citizen of Louisville, Ky., was a most horrible deed. The victim of the assassin, named John Hendel, a German, aged about sixty years, was well known in the city as an honest, industrious wood-sawyer. The instrument used was an axe, the poll of which had been buried up to the helve in the poor man's brain as he slept. No clue was obtained that will lead to the identification of his murderer, and the supposition is that he was killed by some party who imagined that he had saved up some money, as a trunk belonging to him, as well as one belonging to his son, in the same room, had been rifled of their contents, the son averring that over seven hundred dollars was taken from his trunk. The old man was found in a dying condition by the son, who returned about midnight from visiting a young lady. He immediately gave the alarm, but the work of the murderer had been too well performed.

AN infuriated maniac made his appearance on the streets of Louisville the other day, armed with a knife and frantically cut right and left at every living object which came in his way. He killed a horse and slightly stabbed one or two individuals, knocking down others, before he was captured. His name was Jeptha Brown, son of a leading Railway president of that city. Liquor was the cause of his insanity.

THE Democracy of this country have another grievance. The Emperor of Brazil has abolished slavery upon his personal estates. Who can say the offence will not be pushed further? Either the world is getting out of joint, or else the democracy is getting to be out of place in the world.

A WOMAN in Manchester, Ohio, died from swallowing a corn worm. We have often heard of deaths resulting from swallowing corn passed through worms, but this is the first instance of swallowing the worm itself which we have ever heard.

It seems that the libel suit of Charles Reade against the Round Table, was not a mere advertising dodge. The suit has been entered in earnest, alleged libels recited and damages claimed at twenty thousand dollars.

E. A. GRANT and N. Butler are the proprietors of an academy in Louisville, Ky. Judging from the names that firm should possess excellent qualifications to teach the young idea how to shoot.

The Missouri Senatorial contest promises to be quite exciting. Charles D. Drake appears to have the inside track, but it would not be safe to say that he has a certainty of being elected.

PRENTICE says "Butler can't make a beast of himself." It is presumed that Democratic editors only possess the beast making power.

An Error Corrected.

MEADVILLE, Pa., Dec. 24, 1865.

EDITORS GAZETTE:—Knowing fully your course upon the Senatorial question, and believing sincerely that you would not willingly create a false impression regarding the actual chances of any one of the candidates, I now address you to correct a grievous error into which you appear to have fallen. You have, in a recent issue, declared that Mr. Grow has been abandoned by all the northern papers of the State. This is not so. The Bradford Reporter, only a few days ago, issued a warm appeal in his favor, while the following extract from a lengthy editorial in the Record of the Times, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., does not smack much of abandonment. It says:

"The four names most prominent for the office of Senator are Andrew G. Curtin, Simon Cameron, Thaddeus Stevens and Galusha A. Grow. It is natural that the Republicans of Northern Pennsylvania should look to Mr. Grow with pride and hope. He met the rebellious spirit of the South as it deserved before the rebellion broke out into bloodshed. He could not be bribed nor bullied by it. His ability was acknowledged and rewarded by the Speakership of the Thirty-seventh Congress, in which position he won the confidence and good opinion of the loyal people, and he is free from all entanglements and unhappy differences."

It is an act of justice to give place to the above in your columns, and by so doing you will confer a favor on —Fekin is going to have an American college.

—Anna Dickinson delivers no more lectures this season.

—A man has been fined in Detroit for kicking cooking.

—Two grain elevators in Chicago have cleared a profit of $75,000 in two months.

—Government detectives are in Montreal looking up evidence against Surratt.

—A Louisville courtesan has fallen heir to one of the finest plantations in Tennessee.

—A Boston paper in 1810 bragged in large capitals over French news fifty-two days old.

—The Prince Imperial of France has been presented with a complete set of Dickens's works.

—France published more musical compositions last year than there were books published in this country.

—A lucky head of hair saved the life of a man who fell from a house in Springfield and struck upon his head.

—Gen. Rosecrans is said to be "making a pile" in California by his skill and enterprise as a mining engineer.

—Oil has been discovered on Shoal Creek, St. Clair county, Alabama, in abundance, at a depth of one hundred feet.

—Rev. Stephens Williams, a well known Presbyterian divine of Baltimore died suddenly in that city last Saturday night, aged 83.

—A juror has come to grief in New York, by offering to disagree for the sum of $200. It will probably cost him more to agree to be present.

—Louis Fox, the brilliant player, is still missing. His wife offers $200 reward for any information. He was last seen in Rochester, near a canal bridge.

—A young lady teacher in the neighborhood of Mt. Pleasant, N. Y., undertook to correct a little girl when she was set upon by the pupil's eldest sister and so cruelly beaten that she is now a maniac.

—From the beginning of this year to the end of October the number of German immigrants conveyed to the United States from Hamburg was 40,500, against 30,971 at the corresponding period of last year.

—Of the Philadelphia and Baltimore Central railroad, only eleven miles require completion to connect it with the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore railroad at the Susquehanna, near Port Deposit.

—Alexander Hamilton Hayes, a printer, well known throughout the United States, but especially so in New Orleans, died in that city several days ago. He was born in Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, about the year 1806.

—A singular humbug in Lodi was made at a funeral in Paris the other day. Instead of a great deal of pomp in honor of the individual's industry discourse in honor of his virtues, his friends read extract from a new-paper article in his praise.

—A mysterious murder is exciting the people of New Orleans. Miss Dora Hendricks, a young lady of unusual beauty who was boarding in the family of a Mr. McLane, and attending school in the city as the violin. Her room was entered very early on Saturday morning, and she was struck behind the ear with a blunt instrument, from the effects of which she died. Nothing is known of the perpetrator.

—Mrs. Millard went to see her husband at a mill in Walden, Orange County, New York, on Saturday, and in passing some machinery, her dress was caught and one of her legs torn from her body. Her husband, in attempting to rescue her, had an arm terribly mangled. He severed his jack-knife with his teeth, and had nerve enough to cut the tendons holding the injured limb. The husband and wife are both in a critical condition.

—Two French gentlemen recently explored the island of Spitzbergen in a manner never before done. They have measured the mountains, mapped the whole coast, examined the geological formation, the mineralogical, and vegetable products, the zoological peculiarities, &c., of the island. They have found that there, for several months, the long day extended over several months, during which the sun never sets, becoming intensely hot after a month or two by the unintensely hot after a month or two by the unceasing heat from the sun. In this portion vegetation springs up in great luxuriance and attains surprising size. Animal life is also in abundance. The north pole is only a matter of six hundred miles from the islands, as it is thought by the two explorers, as by many others, that the pole itself, and the sea which is supposed to surround it, could be reached from Spitzbergen without many great difficulties encountered. A singular fact the latter explorers, in connection with the island, is the enormous quantities of floating timber which literally covers the waters of the bays and creeks. A careful examination of the character, condition, and kind of these floating logs would, no doubt, lead to a conclusion as to whence and how they came, and probably suggest new theories for the solution of geographical problems connected with the arctic seas.

IMMEDIATE RELIEF.—A CURE GUARANTEED.—CALL'S GREAT RHEUMATIC REMEDY, for Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Gout, Sciatica, Tic Douloureux, and Pain in the Head and Face. This preparation is entirely new, having been in use only for a month; yet, in no case has it failed to give relief. The first dose (forty drops) invariably relieves the pain, and, before the bottle is exhausted, often effects a cure. It not only relieves the most excruciating pain, but, when the patient has been confined to his bed for months, a few doses will so quickly ward off the attack as to enable him to resume his ordinary avocations. In cases of extreme torture, relief is obtained in a few hours. In all cases where it has been resorted to but little is required—rarely more than one bottle. The great charm of CALL'S RHEUMATIC REMEDY is the small quantity necessary to cure the most violent attack. Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Gout, Sciatica, Nervous Headache, and all similar complaints, in ten days to two weeks, are totally eradicated from the system by the use of CALL'S RHEUMATIC REMEDY. In ten days to two weeks, are totally eradicated from the system by the use of CALL'S RHEUMATIC REMEDY. In cases of chronic rheumatism, where the patient has been confined to his bed for months, and given up by his physicians, a few bottles of CALL'S RHEUMATIC REMEDY will restore him to perfect health. In no case is more than one bottle required. Numerous testimonials, from persons in this city, can be seen at the office of the proprietor, No. 84 Fifth street, Pittsburgh. Price, one dollar per bottle. Sole Agent for Pittsburgh.
