CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

Mr. Jefferson is credited with a Revolution once in thirty years. By this we mean that every generation needs a Revolution...

There are minor rumors about the effect that certain members of the Joint Committee reported to investigate...

It is this aspect of the case that causes us to view with favor the proposition to call a Convention to revise the Constitution...

There is no telling what may be done for men or women after death has removed them from the scene. A good many matrons have happened to die...

Some years ago, an acquaintance of ours, not more addled than the mass of Americans to-day, by the misfortune to break his leg...

Stepping into a railroad coach one morning, we encountered an acquaintance on whom we had known since childhood...

Some months ago, in the drawing room of a mutual friend, the president of a committee of superior intellect, of thorough training, of accomplished manners, and of an inveterate habit of reading...

It is worthy of consideration, that while the more rational of the Southern States, and President Johnson with them, are now broadly admitting the right of Congress to impose terms on the rebel States...
