Nor is this all. In eleven of the Southern States, and in at least half a dozen Northern ones, the blacks are now voters, on the same terms as their white neighbors. More than three-quarters of the Colored men who are residents of the United States, possess the ballot. The celerity with which they acquired this right, and the unanimity with which politicians of all party affiliations are engaged in propitiating them, in order to secure their co-operation, or at least to divide their strength, imparts a strong probability to the conjecture that whatever hindrances may yet exist to their enfranchisement in the other States, they have not long to wait. They Lave nearly a million of ballots in their hands, which is a very considerable proportion of the agergate political power of the country, and they can summarily and thoroughly punish any party that shall presume to bar the access of the residue of their race io all the rights and immunities of citizenship. The blacks hold in the Republic to-day more votes than the Irish do, and will soon make their power felt as effectually.

The Democratic journals in Ohio are not only taking ground against both the proposed alterations, but are endcavoring to draw half-hearted Republicans to the support of their candidates. This involves the admission that the Democratic party is opposed to democratic principles.
