TUESDAY JUNE 18, 1867.

AN IMPOSING CEREMONIAL.

On the 29th day of the present month the Catholic Church will commemorate, at Rome, the eighteen hundredth anniversary of the martyrdom of Peter the Apostle. The expectation is that a larger number of the dignitaries of the Church will be present participating than on any occasion hitherto in modern times. From the United States at least one-half the prelates started some days ago, accompanied by an unusual number of priests and laymen of distinction. Every nation in Europe will be still more largely represented, the distances being shorter, and the means of transit easier and less expensive. From South America, Africa, Asia, and the islands of the oceans, delegations are now swarming towards the renowned centre of the Christian world. The Eastern Churches, in communion with Rome, will share in the splendors of the occasion. Sight-seers, of all kindreds, and tribes, and nations, and creeds, are flocking to see a pageant that in gorgeousness and sublimity will surpass any other that has been witnessed for hundreds of years.

That surpassing administrative ability which made Rome the mistress of the world, has come down through the ages the general inheritance of the Catholic Church. In this consists her superiority and power. Among the Protestant bodies there is not one that approaches her in excellence of organization. The Methodists come nearest, but even they are a long way behind.

Protestant divines think the Catholic Church exhausted and effete; that it lacks adaptability to the distinctive forms of modern civilization; that, consequently, it is losing its power over the masses in many nations that have for centuries acknowledged its sway; and that it must soon, in the natural progress of events, cease to be formidable. Statesmen and secular journalists incline pretty unanimously to a different view of the question. That Austria, following the example of France under Louis Phillippe, has a Protestant for Prime-Minister, and that in the kingdom of Italy the dissemination of the Protestant version of the Scriptures and the celebration of public worship according to Protestant rites, shows that Catholic communities, though inherently conservative, do not find it practicable to get out of those resistless currents which sweep the whole human race forward, any more than they can escape that invisible but omnipotent power that moves the planets along their vast projections.

Yesterday, who was not only an eyewitness of all the learning of his age, but had a most versatile and all-comprehending genius, loosened the Catholic traditions in France so that the whole superstructure seemed at the point of disruption. From unpardonable scoffing the pendulum swung to the extreme of all-questioning doubt. The transition was inevitable and healthful. Infidelity is the first step by which any mind escapes from the domain of error into the realm of truth. After the purifying storm had spent its force, Catholicity was the only existing form of religious faith, and the people went back to it. So, in Italy, in the pursuit of civil liberty, the Court and people have broken, to a certain extent, even with the traditions of the Church. Protestants tell us that unbelief is prevalent almost to universality. And on this they predicate hopes that the authority of the Pope will be utterly subverted. This intermediate condition of unbelief or infidelity, which Garibaldi boldly symbolizes, might lead to vast consequences if there was a foundation present for an other belief to build on. In the absence thereof, when the bulldoze shall have obtained national unity and civil liberty, they will in all probability vibrate back to their hereditary faith, holding it unmixed in form but practically modifying it in conformity with the spirit of the passing age.

We do not accept as undoubted the chronicle that records the residence of Peter at Rome. But there is a grandeur in the traditions of the Romish Church, and a wonderful dexterity in the applications of them, a remorselessness in its worship, a flexibility in non-essentials, an adaptation to times and places, which stand unmatched among existing institutions.

ORIGIN OF CAST STEEL.

As the manufacture of cast steel has become one of the largest and most important of the industries of Pittsburgh, and as this is likely to be the Sheffield of this continent in this particular, a few observations upon the origin of making steel by the process of fusing and easting carbonized iron may not be uninteresting.

The art of converting iron into steel was known and practiced in the East centuries before it was introduced into Europe. That peculiar and perhaps unmatched variety of which the far famed Damascus blade is fabricated is quite ancient. The extraordinary qualities of this steel, however, are attributable more to the quality of the iron of which it is made than to any superior art in its conversion into steel. In Asiatic countries, where iron was first made—probably before the deluge—the rude and primitive methods of extracting the metal from the ore are still practiced; and it is worthy of remark, that the ruder the method employed for the reduction of the ore the better the quality of the iron is likely to be. Hence it is a fact that better iron is made this day in both India and Africa, than is made in Europe or America. But an American manufacturer would hardly be content with drawing from his furnace at one time a little cake, of about two pound weight, as is the case with one of the best varieties of Indian iron, and which is used for the manufacture of steel of a quality which can hardly be equaled in Europe or America.

But the manufacture of cast steel is a comparatively modern invention, and is not practiced by the Orientals. The process was conceived and carried into successful practice by BENJAMIN HUNTSMAN, a member of the Society of Friends, at Sheffield, a little over a century ago. Mr. HUNTSMAN was a native of Lincolnshire, and was born in the year 1704. He was naturally a very ingenious man, and although skillful in many things, his chief occupation was the making and repairing of clocks. Finding a difficulty in obtaining steel of such quality as he needed in his operations, he turned his attentions to the making of a better article than was then to be found in the market. In order to be near a good supply of fuel he removed in 1740 from Doncaster to Sheffield, where he prosecuted his experiments, amid many difficulties and discouragements, for a number of years, and finally succeeded in making cast steel of a quality not little if any inferior to that made by the Sheffield manufacturers of the present day. He erected pretty extensive works, and before his death, which occurred in 1776, his steel was known throughout the commercial world; and it is probably owing to his success that Sheffield took and kept the lead in the manufacture of cast steel.

But it is a notable fact that at first the manufacturers of cutlery in Sheffield refused to work Mr. HUNTSMAN'S steel, and that for several years he found his only market in France; but there he found ready sale for all he could make; and it was not until French cast steel cutlery threatened to drive the Sheffield manufacturers out of the market of the world that they were obliged to give in. Before they did so, however, they attempted to get an act of Parliament to prohibit the exportation of cast steel. The was of course refused, and then they went earnestly to work on the new kind of steel. The difficulty they made at first was that the steel was too hard—they could not work it.

Mr. HUNTSMAN never took out letters patent for his process, but kept it a secret as long as he could. Finally, an iron founder, named WALKER, one cold night in mid-winter, in the guise of a half-frozen vagrant, begged piteously to be allowed to come in and lie down somewhere near the furnaces, a request which the kind-hearted workmen granted. Feigning sleep, WALKER watched the entire process, and it was not long, until another cast steel establishment was in operation.

There has been but little change in the process of making cast steel since then. HUNTSMAN used the closed crucibles or pots as do our present manufacturers, into which small pieces of broken steel were put, with whatever fluxes were needed. He put a little green glass in with the other ingredients, a practice which, we think, is discontinued.

ALLEGHENY COMMONS.

The authors of several communications censuring the authorities for licensing the exhibition of the circus on the Commons, will excuse us for not giving place to them in our much crowded columns. Let it suffice that many estimable citizens feel aggrieved by the proximity of such scenes and noises as always attend these exhibitions—and think it a gross perversion of the purposes to which the Commons have very lately been solemnly dedicated, both by the City Councils and the State Legislature. Expostulation with the Mayor has been in vain. The nuisance complained of will happily be but transient, and we doubt not the Mayor would have refused the license asked for had he been apprised beforehand of the offence given by it. When the remonstrances were made it was too late—the privilege having been granted in ignorance of any objection to be made and could not be recalled.

FARM, GARDEN AND ORCHARD.

Encourage the Boys.

A lad from Iowa writes, says the American Agriculturist, that he thinks farmers' sons ought to have a chance to earn something for themselves, to be allowed to make little ventures in stock-raising for pocket money, and to keep them contented at home. We think so too. We suppose a great many farmers do this, certainly the great majority, of our readers do. But many work their boys with as little consideration as they work hired men. They take no pains to make farm life attractive, and the boys are off at the earliest opportunity. They have no joyous memories to bind them to the spot, that ought to be the dearest on earth. To learn the worth of money they must have money as the result of their labors. To form habits of faithfulness, carefulness and economy, these and other virtues must be rewarded. They should have responsibilities put upon them while they are very young, and be encouraged to make money and to save it. Give them a hen, a goose, or turkey, a lamb, or pig, and let them have all they can make by good care and feeding. A boy of ten or twelve years of age, with a little instruction, can manage the poultry. Let him take it on shares and see what he can make out of them. Give him a patch for a garden, and, if near a market, let him sell what he can raise. Give him a half dozen apple trees or pear trees, teach him to graft them, if they need it, and let the fruit be his. Give the boys an interest in your business, and make them intelligent in it, and they will not be in haste to leave the homestead. Encourage them to read agricultural papers and books, and the appetite will grow by what it feeds upon. The farm will be the scene of cheerful, well rewarded labor, and will always be loved.

New Manner of Distributing Ashes for Farming Purposes.

We have received the following translation of an article by Prof. Ilenkoff, Moscow, Russia, from a friend in Washington. The process is not altogether new, but as the success of such operations depends often upon minute details, we are glad to publish it. Prof. I. says:

It was a matter of importance with me to discover a method by means of which every farmer might be enabled to prepare bones for his meadows and fields. As great masses of salts are accumulating in the ashes of every household, and most of them with those burning wood, I used alkalies in connection with unslaked lime, which soon dissolved the bones. To my friend and pupil, Mr. Alexander Engelhart, to whom I communicated my discovery, belongs the honor of having introduced a new and convenient process for gaining manure for agricultural use. I give it in an extract:

Suppose you have 4,000 pounds of bones, you need 4,000 pounds of ashes, (averaging 10 per cent. of carbonate of potash) 600 pounds unslacked lime, and some 4,500 pounds (351-2 gallons) of water. Dig a hole some two feet deep, large enough to receive the bones and one-half their volume besides; parallel to this, you dig another one, 25 per cent. larger, both being filled with bones. First, slake the lime and mix with your ashes, covering 2,00 pounds of bones in the smaller one. Then it is filled with water and left. When it gets dry add, continually, water enough to keep it wet. When the bones crumble in your fingers, then take the whole mass out, and spread it over these bones in the second whole, leaving the decomposition to go on. When this is done let the mass dry; and let it slake in fit for use, add peat powder or mellow garden soil until it is well dried and powdery. Let it be screened over several times, and then apply to your fields.

Thus you get a fertilizer averaging 12 per cent. of phosphate of lime, 3 per cent. of alkalies, and 6 per cent. of nitrogen.

The pits used in this process must of course be dug in soil, to a great degree impervious to water. Clayey soil will answer, if first sprinkled and then pounded, or clay may be "puddled" in a layer of any soil, and a water-tight pit be so made. If the bones be tolerably fresh, there will be very little loss of ammonia. We have known the softening of the bones to be completed on a small scale.—New York Agriculturist.

Timely Hints for June.

Grapes should have all superfluous shoots rubbed off. Do not let young vines overbear. One bunch to the shoot is enough for the first year. More failure of varieties is due to over fruiting, when the vine is young, than to any real fault of the variety. On old vines pinch off the fruiting shoot at three leaves beyond the last cluster. Never remove leaves to expose the fruit to the sun. The leaves do the work, and the berries develop best when shaded. Keep young vines to a single cane. Use sulphur freely on the first appearance of mildew. For the larger insect pests, such as beetles and caterpillars, hand picking is the only remedy.

Animals of all kinds must have clean dry quarters, or in hot weather they will be exposed to lung diseases from exhalations of fermenting manure, etc. Use plaster freely in stables and fowl houses to arrest ammonia; dry soil is almost equally so good.

White Field Beans may be planted any time during the month. It is best to put them in drills. Blue pod or White Cranberry are good varieties, the latter much the largest, the former yielding the surest.

Strawberries must be mulched before the fruit gets large. Use straw, dry hay, corn stalks, or similar material. Saw dust is bad, as it soils the fruit almost as much as earth; in hill or row culture, keep the runners off and keep all cultivation free of weeds.

Pastures.—Look to the water supply in pastures. Nothing dries up the fountains of milk like a lack of water. See also that the grass is not fed off too close, for any rain may be the last for some weeks, and then permanent damage would be sustained by over-stocked land.

Root Crops.—Carrots and parsnips, and beets, may be sowed as late as early in June with fair success. Rutabagas are preferably sown about the 20th in good deep soil, well manured and dressed with bone dust or superphosphate of lime.

Fowls, if confined, should have fresh water and fresh soils daily, and every few days their scratching ground should be forlies up and freshened. Especially provide good dusting boxes, and fresh water.

Parsnips, carrots, beets, radishes, and all root crops should have water, and how the beds well filled with it, at most, every six days after being sown. By watching them at this time, the ground will be softened, and, besides giving the

AN OLD FRIEND.

For many years the friend of the country has circulated the beneficial effects of HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS. Editors, authors, physicians, merchants, officers of the army and navy, clergymen, conductors, ministers of the gospel, and indeed a great cloud of witnesses of every profession, rank and station, have testified to its efficacy as a tonic and regulating medicine. The names and testimonials of these witnesses have been published in the public prints. Many of them are well known to the whole public. Each testimonial has never been dual signed or impugned. This has been tried and pronounced, on the authority of those whose lives and health it has preserved, a pure, harmless and positively sanitary preparation. Attempts have been made to rival it. They have failed. There is nothing equal to the enjoyment experienced by the invalid restored by using this valuable specific. Its mild tone, its sure and vigorous action upon a disordered stomach, as if by touching the chords of human body, recommend it to the whole community as a RELIABLE FRIEND.

PINUS CANADENSIS.

A tree which is found in Canada, Nova Scotia, and the more northern parts of the New England states, and is also found in the elevated and mountainous regions of the Middle States, and abounds in medicinal virtues. Dr. Sweet, of Boston, has prepared a medicine from its sweet inside bark of the pine tree, called DR. LAND'S WHITE PINE COMPOUND, which is a sure cure in all dispirited states of the system, and is also a sure and speedy remedy for consumption, assuring them to remain their own friends, as it will be found well adapted to all Chest diseases, where Balsam has been tried and has failed. It is likewise a sure remedy for Coughs, Colds, etc. It is infallible specific for old and deep-rooted cases of Rheumatism. Many persons who have used a bottle of this medicine, to try, afterwards came back and got a dozen, or half dozen, more, and effected radical cures of diseases of the bladder and kidneys of years standing.

Diabetes, a disease that has been looked upon as among the incurables, is readily relieved by it. Notice the certificate of Asa Hutchinson, Bound Brook, N. J.

The United States Dispensatory, speaking of the pine, says, "It is prescribed in decoction, tincture, and other diseases of the urinary passages; in pine and extensive bronchial affections; and of the bowels. In chronic catarrhal affections, and in hysterical affections of females, it is exceedingly valuable. In all gravelly affections, bowel complaints, and where the kidneys are affected, it can be taken without interruption to one's business, and is a powerful diuretic. In all gravelly affections, healthy power of endurance and vitality, it is the best medicine known." Ask for PINUS CANADENSIS, WHITE PINE COMPOUND. For sale by the proprietor, JOSEPH H.
