TUESDAY, AUGUST 6, 1867.

THE REMOVAL OF SHERIDAN.

The President is resolved, if possible, to remove General SHERIDAN from the command of the military district of Louisiana and Texas, and claims the right to do so if virtue of his office, (as declared in the express terms of the Constitution,) of Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. On the other hand, Gen. GRANT takes the ground that, under the late Supplemental Act of Congress, the discretion and power in the premises rest solely in himself as General of the Army of the United States. In this opinion he is supported by Chief Justice CHASE and by Brigadier General RAWLINS, his Chief of Staff, who has the reputation of being a very able lawyer.

The supplemental reconstruction act of July expressly declares the true intent and meaning of the Act of March 2d, 1867, to be, that the Governments then existing in the Rebel States "were not legal, State Governments, and if continued at all, were to be continued subject in all respects to the military commanders of the respective districts, and to the paramount authority of Congress."

"Section 3. The General of the Army of the United States shall be entrusted with all the powers of suspension, removal and appointment granted in the preceding section to Discret Commanders."

Nothing can be clearer than that this section invests the General of the Army with supreme authority over the administration of the laws of Congress in those rebel States, Congress alone having paramount authority in the premises.

In the fourth section it is declared that "it shall be the DUTY of such commander to remove from office as aforesaid all persons who are disloyal to the government of the United States, or who use their official influence in any manner to hinder, delay, prevent or obstruct the due and proper administration of this act, and the acts to which it is supplementary."

This is precisely what General SHERIDAN did, and for the doing of which the President wishes to remove him. But General GRANT, under the express powers conferred upon him by law, as expressed in the third section, quoted above, cannot permit this to be done without a violation of his own duty. Perhaps the President thinks that this is not constitutional law, as President BUCHANAN thought there was no power granted by the Constitution to coerce a rebellious or seceding State; but be this as it may, it is very certain that the Constitution does not authorize him to decide upon the constitutionality of any act of Congress. His business is to see that the laws are faithfully executed. And if Congress sees proper to make an extraordinary provision for an extraordinary emergency, and clothe certain officers with extraordinary powers, he has no more right to interfere with those officers in the discharge of their duties under the law, than he has to enter the chamber of the Supreme Court and dictate to it as to the discharge of its appropriate functions.

The duties imposed by this law upon the General of the Army and those under his command, are extra military, special, definite, and extraordinary; and the law, in express terms, excludes interference from any quarter, with the full, free and unobstructed discharge of those duties.

THE PRESIDENT construes the Office Tenure Act to provide that he may not remove at pleasure any office holder whom he appointed, but may remove at pleasure any office holder appointed by any of his predecessors in the Presidency. Mr. STANTON was not appointed Secretary of War by President JOHNSON, but by President LINCOLN. Upon the accession of Mr. JOHNSON, after the assassination of Mr. LINCOLN, he requested Mr. STANTON to hold over, which he has done up to this time. It is understood that Mr. STANTON, on various occasions, has differed from the President as to the best course to be pursued; though he has in most instances done what the President desired. This was an infelicity of his subordination. Since the passage of the Office Tenure bill, Mr. STANTON has naturally stiffened up. He has felt that he was something more than a clerk to the President. Hence he has asserted his own views with increased strength; as upon the proposition to remove Gen. SHERIDAN.

This so incensed the President that he resolved to be rid of the contumacious Secretary. Following the customary course in such cases, he signified to Mr. STANTON that his resignation would be acceptable. That gentleman, believing his case to be fully covered by the Office Tenure Act, refuses to give in his resignation. The President has now but two choices, either to let Mr. STANTON remain, or to forcibly eject him. The latter choice would be in keeping with the natural violence of the President; but, it is possible, he will listen to maturer counsel.

SEVERAL DAYS AGO four members of the "National Union State Central Committee," which drew the DENISON machine in Pennsylvania, had an interview with the President at Washington. Forthwith various contradictory reports of what was said were sent over the country. In commenting on the subject, we stated what these conflicting rumors were, and used them to show the unreliability of most accounts from the National capital.

We are now in receipt of a letter from the Chairman of the aforesaid Committee, complaining of our remarks, and asking us to copy a long article from his newspaper, the Daily News, relative to the interview in question. Now, we esteem Mr. FLANIGAN as a gentleman, and should be glad to please him, but cannot do what he asks, for the plain reason that his article throws no light on the matter under consideration. It commences by confessing that all sorts of rumors are afloat touching the nature and upshot of the conversation, which is precisely what we stated; then goes on to tell how disinterested the members of the aforesaid Committee are, and how patriotic the President is; and winds up by refusing to make any statement as to what the Committee wanted or the President advised. Whenever Mr. FLANIGAN shall get down from his stilts, and detail what actually transpired, we shall gladly print his statement, provided we find it of any value.

STATEMENTS have been made in these columns touching the discovery of tin in Missouri, in large quantities and of superior quality. These discoveries have led to speculation that bids fair to rival the petroleum furore in Pennsylvania, three years ago. Will the people never learn wisdom in such matters? Thousands of men and women lost sums of money they could ill afford to spare, by reckless adventures in reputed oil lands and stocks, for every one that came out with a handsome gain, legitimate or fraudulent. Now there are oil properties on the market here, at moderate values, which are so productive that thirty-six months ago they would readily have commanded many millions of dollars. Costly experience has sobered the judgments of the multitude as to petroleum. Is it only that they may go all the crazier after tin.

IN Crawford county Mr. Monroe B. LOWRY, at the primary election, distanced his competitor, Colonel D. C. McCOY, by 1,537 votes, which was more votes than the Colonel received. McCOY was mixed up in the Congressional fight for Congress last year, and now gets paid off.

MUNICIPAL TAXATION.

The Financial and Commercial Circular makes a comparative statement of the municipal indebtedness of six cities, showing in each case how much per head the responsible debts amount to, according to population. Here are the tables:

Considering that Philadelphia has a much larger built-up area to watch, pave, light, drain, water, &c., than either of the other cities, the comparison is decidedly in her favor.

Suicide of a Boy—An Orphan Boy, Lonely and Dejected, with "No One to Care for Him," Takes Strychnine.

One of the saddest cases of self-destruction that has come to our knowlege for some time occurred on Sunday afternoon, on the opposite side of the river. The victim was a boy, fifteen years of age, a druggist's apprentice, with as fair prospects in life as the generality of boys. But he was an orphan, and felt the want of a mother. He saw other boys loved and cared for by fond parents, while he was all alone in the world. Being of a sensitive, retiring disposition, his friendless condition preyed upon his mind, and he deliberately prepared to destroy his life.

The name of the boy is Henry Tyzack. When about five years of age, his father, who resided on Morgan street, was killed by an officer whom he resisted in an effort to arrest him. His mother soon after went up on the Osage to reside with her sister, taking Henry with her. Becoming low spirited, Mrs. Tyzack drowned herself in the Osage river. Henry came to St. Louis, and being without home and friends, was taken up by the police as an abandoned boy. Mr. Libby, of the Odd Fellows, seeing the fact of the boy's arrest mentioned in the papers, and knowing that the orphan had been contributing means for his support—his father having been an Odd Fellow—procured his release from the chain-gang, and had him sent to school. Two or three years ago he was apprenticed to the drug busines with Mr. Thos. Tanton, corner of Sixth and Olive streets, where he remained up to the time of his death.

Between five and six o'clock last Sunday afternoon, Mr. Hehmer, a fisherman, residing on the bank of the river, about half a mile below the Terre Haute depot, discovered the boy lying on the sand near the water, writhing in convulsions. The boy had taken a bath in the river, and then dressed himself and swallowed strychnine. Before taking the fatal dose he had written his name on the wet sand of the shore near where he was found. The fisherman took him to his house and sent for a physician, under whose treatment the sufferer partially recovered, but died about ten o'clock the same night.

Before his death he stated that he did not like his situation at Mr. Tanton's; that he was not well treated by his fellow apprentice; and had informed his employer that he intended to leave him and engage in some other business. Mr. Tanton reminded him that he was an apprentice until he reached the age of twenty-one, and threatened to have him arrested if he left. Finding there was no escape from his unpleasant situation, Henry resolved to commit suicide. For this purpose he took from a jar as much strychnine as he could hold in one hand, and crossed the river on Sunday between one and two o'clock. A portion of the poison was found in his pocket at the fisherman's house.—St. Louis Democrat.

The Face a Record of Life.

The record of a man's moral and intellecutal life is written in his face, in such indelible and striking lines that a tolerably well skilled in the science of physiognomy can quickly and accurately measure subtle, unseen, character. There is an old maxim that "blood tells," and it does reveal its gentle or boorish, its virtuous or vicious nature in physical movements of the body and modes of expression, and also in prevailing and related ideas. So, likewise, character is perpetually struggling against the bonds of restraint, and pushing out into the broad daylight of actual recognition. By a careful reticence at the right time, and a sort of negative habit of life, combined with a proper management, a man may pass current for altogether more than his actual value. But sooner or later, the muscles of the face and the speaking eye let out the secret of the interior life.

It is a great study, these human faces looking up from the audience room, the social circle, the street, the car, beaming out an effulgence of sympathy and goodness, or frowning under the rigors of disappointment, or flashing out defiance and contempt for the sources of their discomfort. The young man who aspires to nothing higher than the character of a universal "bruiser," may forget this coarse passion; we all photographed upon his face in such a manner that all discerning people can read him through at almost the first glance. We cannot help "sizing us up as others see us," and that explains away very much of the impudence and swagger of the multitude, which pass for genuine energy and life. If you would know more of an acquaintance than age, occupation, capacity and temper—if you would inspect the secret sources where he draws supplies of impulse and love of comfort along life's toilsome and dusty pathway, look into his face and read the whole elaborate story of his strivings, his loves and aversions, his triumphs and failures. It is all there, locked up in fleshy characters, in the folds and furrows made by the ploughshare of time and toil, or the exhausting stimulants of license and prodigality. We literally turn ourselves inside out through the face. The love, the composure, the passion, the unrest, the hatred and revenge, the strength and the weakness, the angel and the beast of our natures, all collect and come to a focus in the face, and make disclosures which no magical arts can conceal. And it seems to us that when the great apostle said "some men's sins are open before-hand, going before to judgment," he must have been looking into the hypocritical faces of the old Scribes and Pharisees. Throughout all her wonderful array of diversity and magnificence, Nature abhors concealment, and this accounts for, and magnifies, too, the revelations of character shining through the human face divine.

Didn't Recognize It.

A wealthy man of Boston, who owns a country residence in the suburbs of that city, recently became dissatisfied with it, determined to have another, and instructed an auctioneer, famous for his descriptive powers, to advertise it in the papers at private sale, but to conceal the location, telling purchasers to apply at his office. In a few days the gentleman happened upon the advertisement, was pleased with the account of the place, showed it to his wife, and the two concluded it was just what they wanted and that they would secure it. So he went to the office of the auctioneer and told him that the place he had advertised was such a one as he desired, and he would purchase it. The auctioneer burst into a laugh and told him that it was a description of his own house where he was then living. In vain the advertisement again, pondered over the "grassy slopes," "beautiful vistas," "smooth lawn," etc., and broke out, "is it possible. Well, auctioneer, make out my bill for advertising and expenses, for, by George, I wouldn't sell the place now for three times what it cost me!"

THE Nashville Press makes this statement:

"It has been charged by the President's Bohemian corps that the State Government has disfranchised a majority of the males over twenty-one years of age. This is a falsehood. There are not, at the outside, more than 180,000 males in this State over twenty-one. This number represents a population of 1,250,000, and there are not so many people now living in the State. There are about 120,000 registered voters, and 50,000 disfranchised rebels who are denied the privilege of suffrage, because it would be unsafe to admit them to the ballot-box. They do not vote because they have no right to vote."

THE Cincinnati Gazette says:

Many of our readers have pleasant recollections of the Rev. John Hall, D.D., of Dublin, one of the Irish delegates to the late Presbyterian Assembly, in this city. We hear that he has accepted the pastorate of the Nineteenth Street Presbyterian Church, New York. His salary is to be $6,000 in gold, and he is to have the use of a parsonage. The Church recently dismissed at his own request, the Rev. Dr. Rice, formerly of Cincinnati, presenting him on his retirement with a sum sufficient to support him comfortably during the remainder of his days. Dr. Hall will be a great acquisition to American Presbyterianism, as in learning, eloquence and ability, he has few rivals.

A New Love Test.

The English papers tell of a sentimental individual named Stanhope, who, having become possessed with the notion that his wife was not so fond of him as she should be, resolved to put her love to the test. This he did by hanging himself in effigy in the attic, and concealing himself where he could watch the effect of the spectacle. Here is the sequel:

After awhile, his daughter came up after a chipping rope, and caught a glimpse of the suspended figure. She ran down the stairs, screaming "Oh, mother, mother! poor papa has hung himself." "Now for it," thought Felix, in ambuscade, "we shall have a touching scene presently." "Hung himself," he heard Mrs. Stanhope repeat, as she walked leisurely up stairs, "He hasn't got pluck enough for such a thing or he would have done it long ago. Well, I believe he has done it, however," she said, as she came in view of Felix's representative. "Moll (to the little girl,) I think he ought to be cut down. You had better go into the kitchen and get a knife, my dear; but don't go down too fast or you might fall and hurt yourself. Stay, I forgot. There's no knife in the kitchen sharp enough. You can go round to Mr. Holmes, the shoemaker—he's only four streets off—tell him to what it before he sends it. And, Molly, when you are in the neighborhood, you can stop at Aunt Sukey's and ask how the baby is. And, Molly, you can stop at the grocer's shop as you come back, and get a pound of sugar."

"Poor Felix!" sighed Mrs. Stanhope, when her daughter had departed, "I hope we shall get him down before the vital spark's extinct, for these burnings are very troublesome, and cost money. He wanted to put an end to himself, too; and I think I ought to let him have his own way for once in his life; he used to say that I was always crossing him. I wish he hadn't spoiled that new clothes line; an old rope might have answered his purpose." Here a voice, which sounded like that of the supposed suicide, broke in upon Mrs. Stanhope's soliloquy with "You confounded Jezabel, I'll be the death of you!" Mrs. Stanhope, thinking this must of course be a lovely exclamation, uttered a wild scream, and attempted to escape down the narrow staircase. Felix, starting from his place of concealment, gave chase. Mrs. Stanhope stumbled midway on the flight of stairs, and Mr. Stanhope having just reached her, and made a grasp at her disheveled hair as it streamed backward, the amiable partners were precipitated to the bottom together; both were badly bruised.

Church Etiquette—In Memoriam.

It used to puzzle us, before we understood the origin of the custom, to account for the peculiarly American idea of church etiquette which compels a gentleman to step into the aisle, allow a lady to pass in before him, and resent himself in the most comfortable place in the pew. The European certainly must be at a loss to account for the custom on the principle that the laws of etiquette are founded on the general rule of making others as comfortable and happy as possible. But we cannot join with the many who wish this custom, troublesome though it may sometimes be, abolished. It is a relic of the olden time in America when men went to church with their muskets, and had their children and wives take the inside of the pew, so that they might rush into the aisle at the first signal from the watchman that hostile Indians were near. The custom comes to us with the sacred memories of the trials and courage and hardships of our forefathers. It tells of hard-earned homesteads in the Western wilderness; of men and women who had the foundations of a great nation among scenes which called for nerve, and energy, and bravery. Surely the preservation of this custom is a token of respect to their memory is not too great a burden for their fashionable sons and daughters of to-day, who owe so much of their present prosperity and wealth. The people of England undergo every form of inconvenience rather than give up time-honored customs, and we laugh at them for it. We care too little for these things. The American motto is "Let the dead past bury its dead."

A better motto is the golden rule, "Do unto others as you would that others do unto you;" how will it be when we are dead?—New York Gazette.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

Victim of debility, who is responsible for your feebleness? Not yourself, you say, for you have done all you could to cure it. Quit's a mistake on your part. You haven't tried HOSTETTER'S BITTERS.

Gloomy dyspeptic, with an uneasy stomach and a world-weary face, of course you don't think you're responsible for your own excitement. But you are. It is easy to see from your condition that you haven't tried HOSTETTER'S BITTERS.

Bilious sufferer, it is not your fault, you think, that your appetite comes and goes day by day. But you can be blamed if you don't try HOSTETTER'S BITTERS. Everybody who has tried HOSTETTER'S BITTERS has derived benefit from it.

Florida, to whom fever and ague is a household word, who has a blood and whose brain seems to be whirling with the effects of quinine, why don't you do you cause the responsibility? O, no! You have not taken HOSTETTER'S BITTERS, and all the while are medicines. What could you do more? One thing more you could do, and that is to read the circular you will find in each package that now pack from the BITTERS.

Nervous invalid, what have you to say? You plead that you have taken all the services of the faculty, and that you are the greatest victim to ill luck in your family. You are not responsible. Only take HOSTETTER'S BITTERS, in reality, according to directions, and you will be blamed for all future ailments. Should complaints, the Bitters will not be responsible.

CURE OF FISTULA.

DR. KETNER: I write to thank you for your kindness and scientific management of my case, for which I called to consult you some time in January last. You will remember that I had a complication of diseases, which finally ended in a terrible fistula, which I had been advised to "let alone" on account of a harrassing cough, which it was feared might fasten on my lungs. I knew that the popular mode of treating disease like mine was by a cutting operation, which, if successful at all, would naturally throw the disease upon the lungs or some other vital organ, on account of the weakness of the cure, and the immediate check to a discharge which I was constrained to believe was a salutary provision of Nature to get rid of some morbid condition in the system. I feel perfectly satisfied that your method of treatment, pertaining to the system, and local applications to the fistulous part, must cure, if anything could, without cutting, which I find it did, and I am happy to report myself well in every particular, with sounder and better health than I have had for years. I would also add that the applications you made were almost painless. I do not feel like a new man, with all the energies and vigor of restored health.

Dr. Ketner's consultation rooms are No. 120 Penn street, from 8 A. M. until 4 p. m.
