LEITER FROM CANTON, N. Y.

The St. Lawrence—Ogdensburg—Canton—St. Lawrence County—Religious Denominations—St. Lawrence University and Theological Seminary—Agricultural Pursuits—Dairying—Mineral Resources—New Railroad—Summer Resorts—Thousand Islands—Fishing Excursion—Hon. St. Ten Wright.

[Special Correspondence Pittsburgh Gazette.]

CANTON, N. Y., August 13, 1867.

Passing down the beautiful St. Lawrence river, with its enchanting scenery, for nearly sixty miles, you arrive at the thriving town of Ogdensburg. Widely known as the rendezvous of Gen. Meade when ordered to have an eye on the "bloody Fenians" who meditated an invasion of the New Dominion. Just adjacent miles southeast of Ogdensburg is Canton. Though hundreds of miles from Pittsburgh, yet in this bay of cosmopolitan views and feelings, some items may not be without interest to the many readers of the GAZETTE.

St. Lawrence county, of which Canton is the County Seat, extends along the St. Lawrence nearly seventy-five miles, and reaches south over one hundred and twenty-five miles, covering a large area and embracing a population of about [illegible] thousand. There are but seven counties in the State which exceed it in population, and those embrace within their limits the larger cities. Though the county seat, Canton, has a population of but about two thousand, the villages is pretty, however, and surrounded by a good farming district, owing to its nearly central location it must ever retain its position as the shire town of the county, and this, with other advantages, will give it a sure and steady, if not a rapid growth. All the leading religious denominations are represented, the Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian and Universalist being the most numerous. The last named has the institution of learning under its care, the St. Lawrence University and Theological Seminary. Though chartered as a University, but two departments have been organized, and one of these but poorly sustained. The buildings, four stories in height, including the basement, and one hundred and twenty sixty feet, occupy a beautiful elevation, commanding a view of the surrounding country for many miles. Some sixty students were catalogued the past year. The college seven in the Theological department. But four Professors are employed, as the want of funds prevents the employment of a larger number. The Legislature of New York, which deals liberally with its institutions of learning, donated twenty-five thousand dollars to the incipient University. We are also informed that the authorities have voted one hundred thousand dollars to the Genesee College, on condition that the trustees will remove it from Lima to their city.

The land in this vicinity is rolling, well adapted to agricultural purposes, and of good quality. Substantial dwellings and barns, multiplying from year to year, and farms constantly improving in appearance and quality, give evidence that farming here will yield fair remunerative labor. Dairying is especially profitable. Most of the milk and cream is sent to market from St. Lawrence county than from any other in the State. A correspondent visited one cheese manufactory which consumes the milk of four hundred and seventy-five cows. Eight hundred cows supply milk to another manufactory located in the village. The manufactories are kept neat and clean, and a visit to them furnishes the gratification of every lover of the compressed curd.

The supply of iron ore is abundant and of the very purest quality. Iron and steel of remarkable strength and tenacity are manufactured from it, and thousands of tons are annually shipped to other parts in order to mix with ores of a lower grade. These mines are constantly increasing in value, and will be sources of immense wealth to their owners.

An outlet for the products of this region is furnished by the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg Railroad, either north to the St. Lawrence, and thence by water transit, or south, and thence by its connections with other roads, to all parts of the country. Most of the flour, lumber, leather, staves, &c., manufactured here, are shipped in this way to larger and more remunerative markets. These articles are produced in considerable quantities at this point, the De Grasse, which flows through the village, affording excellent water power. A new railroad is now in process of survey from Ogdensburg, through Canton, to Schenectady. Our desire is to connect Ottawa, the capital of the New Dominion, by nearer route, with Albany and New York. Its last quality must be. It will be seen, by linking points of so much importance, it must become one of the most important thoroughfares in the country. Not only will the route be an advantage to Canton, and the country in its immediate vicinity, but it will develop a district hitherto unreached by any public improvement. Sixty miles of the road will pass through what to-day is an unbroken wilderness, rich in iron ore and lumber. Nearly the whole route is now densely timbered with white, spruce, hemlock, beech, maple, basswood, cherry, birch and birch. For the last three are among the finest in the world for cabinet and finishing purposes. The superior qualities of the black ash have been discovered only recently. The wood becomes very rich as it grows older, almost equaling mahogany. All becomes better known it will be extensively used. The route of the large and beautiful Presbyterian Church in Ogdensburg, which is rapidly approaching completion, are made of this wood, with walnut cap, and are exceedingly beautiful. I know of nothing which presents a richer appearance.

Some idea of the size and undeveloped wealth of this wilderness may be gathered from the fact that it reaches about 150 miles in length and sixty in width, covering an area of six thousand square miles, and embracing the Southern part of St. Lawrence and Franklin counties, the south-western part of Clinton county, the western part of Warren and Essex, and the northern part of Fulton, Hamilton and Herkimer counties. Deer are found in considerable numbers in the wilderness, and also an occasional wolf, panther, black bear, beaver and otter. The presence of deer, and the many beautiful lakes and numerous streams, abounding in fish, render the wilderness a favorite resort in the summer for fishing and hunting parties. These parties furnish themselves with tents and provisions, and go out from one to four weeks, as inclination decides, or business permits. The fishing is done during the day, and the hunting by night. The deer come to the margin of the lake to feed, and by the pencilling which they make attract the attention of the hunter, who always occupies a light canoe, and cautiously through the water. Great caution is necessary. A lamp attached to the head, and so arranged as to throw light on the barrel only of the gun, enables the hunter to take aim. Experts are often very successful. All the surroundings tend to render the sport very exciting, and the anecdotes of Nimrod and Izaak Walton look forward impatiently to the time of their yearly pilgrimages. Want of time alone prevented your correspondent from enjoying a practical proof of its pleasures.

As a evidence of the water privileges afforded by the wilderness, it may be stated that the head waters of the Oswegatchie have their rise in Cranberry Lake; the De Grasse in Lake Massawepie; the Oswegatchie, (Snow [illegible] in Tupper's Lake and Long Lake; the Saranac, and Bigand Little Chazy in Lake Champlain; and in the same wilderness are found the headwaters of the St. Regis, Deer, Salmon, Hudson, Black and Raquette rivers. The Hudson and Raquett, the former of which enters Lake of New York, and the latter in the St. Lawrence, have each within a distance of not more than a mile. It is claimed that the Raquett affords greater water power for its length than any other stream in the country. Rapids, having sufficient fall for manufacturing purposes, are found in an average of every half mile. One remarkable fact, as stated to me by myself of the hunters, is a "nigger at the little end." Another peculiarity of all the streams is the color of water is of a dark brown olive color.

Before closing my notes for relating a little of my own experience! Let it be understood that your correspondent has a passion for piscatorial sports; in a word, is a disciple of Izaak Walton, albeit, his fame has never been heralded by the brazen voice of hook and line. He has a reputation, but not for success. Many a time and oft has he expressed it, "luther way." As he declined the honor of the [illegible] in question, was fired by the statement in one of the guide books, that "angling is rather fatiguing the St. Lawrence in an other wise, from the great quantity and size of its fish." He was therefore induced to say: Would it not be an achievement to be remembered, to catch a muskinonge, pound or which have been caught in the St. Lawrence during former and every fifty rounds? Even at Canton some are caught weighing twenty pounds and upwards. His wastebasket, his friend, Mr. Traver, at last agreed to accompany him, and armed with two rods, five "chunk," and a "spoon," and with explicit instructions how to manage the muskinonge, they started out, "just for a couple of hours." A walk of half a mile brought the anglers to a deep hole in the river. Some large rocks afforded good casting. The two threw in, one at each end of the rocks, and of the lines, and were let down into the water. In a few minutes Mr. Traver had a "bite." He gave a pull, when out came the chub, minus its fins and most of its scales. Your correspondent had a similar experience. He reflected on Mr. Traver's failure, became impulsed too soon, as remembering the instruction to pull until the fish pulls, he tried to make sure by being patient. Waiting a minute or so, he concluded to give more line, he poised himself on the outer edge of the rock, threw his arms on their full length, and remained in that position until he felt as if the casting penance. Becoming desperate, he at last pulled, when up came the line, as the hook being too heavy, the hook and part of the line were left in the hole. Didn't go for a bath, and the hole was not followed more. But Mr. T. became disgusted and tried the spoon. As I later had followed suit, but became disgusted also. Didn't like spoon victuals. Your correspondent tried the other hook and line with precisely the same success as in the first instance. Left the hook and part of the line in the water. Came home with two rods and part of each line, three chunks, and the firm conviction that there were large fish in the De Grasse. As for the Muskinonge, however, they were too large for a single meal, and would keep in warm weather.

Not the least interesting item is the fact that Canton was for a long time the residence of the Hon. Silas Wright, who died in 1847. A plain marble shaft marks his resting place in the village cemetery. A man of powerful intellect, fine social qualities, and generous impulses, a statesman and a statesman and distinguished as a political leader, his memory is gratefully cherished by thousands of both political parties.

Your correspondent cannot close this letter without acknowledging his many obligations to Mr. J. Traver, Rev. B. Crosbey, Mr. Packer and A. D. Sawyer, Esq., for many personal kindnesses, and for many of the items contained in this letter.

I. C. P.

Lost in the Mountains.

The Aroma Tribune contains the following account of a woman and child who were lost in the mountains in that vicinity: One day last week, a woman named Page, and two girls named Benner, started to the mountains north of town for the purpose of gathering whortleberries. Not returning in the evening, Mr. Page and Mr. Benner started to the mountain in search of them. After wandering about all night and finding no trace of them, they returned to town and gave the alarm. When some one hundred and fifty men from the shops started out to search for them. The men divided off in squads of ten in order to scour the woods in all directions. One party going in the direction of the head waters of Sally Hill, met the woman and girls returning, they having been found by some person in that locality, and by him set upon the road to Alden. They had wandered through the woods all night, and in consequence were pretty well fatigued. It is not likely that they will undertake a trip of the kind soon again. We advise persons going to the mountains for berries to have some one along who is acquainted with the ground.

Killed on the Railroad.—On Saturday night a man named James Barton was killed on the Atlantic and Great Western Railroad, at Mansfield, Ohio. As he was not discovered until he was dead, it is not known exactly how he was killed, but it is supposed he was intoxicated and laid down on the track to sleep. While in this position he was run over by the night express. Mr. Barton was a shoemaker by trade, and we believe was not a married man. His body was badly mutilated, his neck broken, and one or both legs nearly cut off. During the war he was a soldier in Capt. Boland's company. His remains were interred in the cemetery on Sunday.

Trouble Among the Germans.—Simon Wich appeared before Alderman Taylor, yesterday, and made information against John Andreas Wish Gatch, for surety of the peace. He alleges the defendant is a dangerous man, and that he is in the habit of abusing him, the prosecutor, on all occasions, that the defendant struck his brains out and made unmerciful other threats of a serious character. A warrant was issued for the arrest of the accused, and, at the hearing was committed in default of three hundred dollars bail to answer at the next Court of Quarter Sessions.
