It has seemed to us that this line of argumentation was pressed beyond the fair limit of reason. The prime inquiry, in cases of this sort, The prime inquiry, in cases of this sort.

Is not, should not be directed to finding which form will lead to the smallest ocults of money, but which will most efficiently conduce to the true ends of municipal administration. Of course, the question of relative cost has its place, but it should be subordinated to the matter of chief moment. In expending money, whether for public or private objects, reasonable care should be taken to get the money's worth in return.

Doubtless, it would be cheaper, so far allows a companied in this, but it is certainly not honorable and commendation.

"Every one is happy to receive prizes, and the hope that he may, is a great inducement to present articles in comment.

Our people are often annoyed by the disparagements to which these municipal divisions subject them. They frequently find themselves occupying a position inferior to that to which they are entitled, when just recognitions would be to their profit. The disquietude they feel in consequence finds expression in various ways, some serious and some amusing. If the centwatakers or the internal revenue officials rate Pittsburgh to be as she stands in her isolated corporate capacity, tables are laboriously prepared and published to show that there is another and much more important Pittsburgh; not ene of statutes, but of fact; that is, they add to Pittsburgh to be packed to be proved to the compact form of the packed, pears, and even the choicer early apples the basket is fast giving way; the surroundings. Why not stream the compact form of the packers allows it to be packed to better advantage than the baskets.

imputation of unworthy and sinister motives. As we judge, these impeachments are not only unnecessary but unjust. This is a question upon which citizens of equal intelligence and purity may take opposite sides, without laying themselves open to condemnation as actuated by selfath or ambitious considerations. It is not a question of principle, but of expediency. The inquiry is not as to what is right, but what is best. Will the interests of the people congregated in this locality, and here prosecuting various lawful callings, be more largely and effectually promoted by combining under one municipal government, or by maintaining the various and distinct corporations now existing? This is the question to people are to determine the people are to determine to take a prize over a batter one.
