A Talk with Ben Wade A correspondent who had recently an in- and not to Congress terview freely with Senator Wade, reports. the conversation to the Cincinnati Gazette as follows:

"I told a man the other day," said the Senator, "when he commenced trying to pump me about my intentions, for the benefit of some New York newspaper, that I hadn't forgotten the picture in the old clementary spelling book, of the milkmaid arranging what she was to do with her chickens before they were hatched. "But then" he continued, "I should be a very curiously constituted man if I did not do some thinkink as to what my course ought to be, in case I have to assume the duty to which these proceedings point. And there's one thing de up my mind to: whatever else may be done, I shall try, if the power is put into my hands, to bring the Executive Department of the Government into harmony with the Legislative. I don't believe the President ought to be a sort of Grand Lama, reigning in seclusion up at the other end of the avenue, and never letting us know what he wants or intends; all the time taking Congress by surprise, and holding aloof from members, so that there is no inducement for comparison of views before both sides are committed."

"I don't believe," he continued, "that a President ought to be setting himself up as a policy maker. When I am asked what my policy will be in case I have to discharge the Presidential duties, I generally answer that I won't have any policy. It's the duty of Congress to adopt a policy, and the duty of the President to execute it. We've had trouble enough from the efforts of Presidents to set up a policy for themselves, and force Congress into its adoption by the use of the Government patronage and otherwise."
On several points, however, Mr. Wade seems to have decided that it will be his duty, if he should succeed to the Presidency, to have a policy. He speaks of them-not obtrusively-least of all after the fashion of the milkmaid counting the chickens in her egg basket--but with simple and manly

"The very first thing I should try, if such a thing as we are talking about should hap-pen, would be to see to it that the real Union men of the South are protected. Those people down there have made us enough trouble, first by their treason, and since their surrender, by their continual turbulence. I do t believe they have ever been ruled with a firm enough hand. I am of the Senator, "on which I feel very strongly. Government; and besides, the people are heavily pressed by taxes, and won't stand it much longer. We must economize—every—

we've got to do. . The party can't live without it, and what's more important, the country can't prosper. We must stop this outsystem of fraud and peculation. The Government can't stagger under it much longer. There was, as compared with the present state of things, but little a broken bridge ahead of him. Why, sir, two-thirds of the present tax officers are men get trusted for a pipe of tobacco in their own | sake, must convict Andrew Johnson towns, are selected to collect the revenue of the Government. I know men, and so do you, to whom some of our constituents have to pay their taxes, to whom no neighbor judgment day.

Yet your body confirmed them!" "Yes, we did. Sometimes we were out-voted and sometimes we were deceived, or to this in value or brilliancy; a diadem Some of those rascals are enough, unless you have a personal knowledge of them, to deceive the very elect. I don't know that I could escape being deceived if I were President. Likely enough I would get picked up sometimes, too. But one thing I do know-I shouldn't select men because knew they were rascals and wanted rascally work out of them. And I believe there are course, if the power came into my hands, I should try to carry out my ideas about it. I PHILOSOPHY OF MARbelieve that in levying taxes we ought to keep our eyes steadily on the principle, which should govern us throughout. .

should strive to take the burdens off industry, and to secure our laboring classes relief from foreign competition.' "That means tariff, preffy strong, doesn't it. Mr. Wade?" "Yes-that means tariff, pretty strong; it means a high tariff. We can't protect our laboring classes any other way half so well -can't secure the revival of business, and stop the balance of trade and of gold from being perpetually against us in the markets of the world. You know this is no new notion with me; but the present condition of the country seems to make it more important than ever before. I am in favor of revising our revenue system, of getting the taxes off domestic industry as fast as we can, and clapping them on the foreign competitors." "People who think there's great danger of my rushing headlong into war," continued the Senator, "or doing some other extreme thing, simply because I've always had the habit of speaking my mind freely, don't seem to know much about human nature."

"I've always wanted, you know, to travel ahead, on the skirmish line of our principles, but have tried never to get so far ahead as to be captured by the enemy. Now, you know my course here well enough. You know that I never differed, to any serious extent, from my party, except on one matter. As to everything else, why, if I was wrong my party was wrong, and the majority of the American people were wrong; if I was intemperate in action, or over zealous, or extreme, or impracticable, so were they. "But on one point I did differ from my party. That was in opposing Mr. Lincoln's course in pocketing our reconstruction bill, and setting up a reconstruction policy of his own—exactly the thing that has got us into all this trouble now. I did not feel very much opposed to that, and I said so. That splendid fellow, Winter, Davis, and I published a reconstruction. lished a paper about it. I've never taken back one word of that paper, and I stand by it now. The Republican party now takes exactly the ground that Winter Davis and I the world the word ways got into took then; and the trouble we've got into arises from the President's taking the opposite ground, that reconstruction, belongs to him "More than that, Mr. Lincoln came over to our view before his death. Mr. Sumner can tell you all about it. Only a short time before the assassination, Mr. Lincoln FEATURE OF HISPOLICY IF MADE PRESIDENT. told Senator Sumner that that thing was the great error of his life, and that he never should have given occasion for what the papers called the Wade and Davis manifesto.

Case. We find the annexed paragraphs in Town send's last letter to the Cleveland Leaaer: Wade and Chase eame face to face on Friday last, when the former took the oath as a juror in the impeachment trial. Chase read the oath; Wade held up his hand and repeated it in morsels; their faces were only a few inches apart, Very grim and dark looked the old hemlock of Ashtabula; in all his gracious suavity and gravity the Chief Justice met the other's hawk-gaze, There seemed to be no love spilled between them. I fancy that is the nearest approach to an embrace they will ever make. Yet these rivals have pursued the same truth to almost qual heights of victory and honor. Their differences are of temperament and accident only, It is strange to see Judge Chase, with all his rounded powers of mind and manners, fail to climb the topmost round of the ladder, always barely beyond his reach, while the old rugged wayfarer jogs up and perches on it, There is no royal road to the Presidency, but steadfast faith to principles. With Ben Wade President of the United States, as he will be in all probability, even the dreams of Wendell Phillips may come true. Thus the horizon of progress is always in the distance. We cannot rally round the flag and not go forward: for the flag must move to wave. It is curious to see the way Grant and Butler fight shy of each other. General Grant is reported never to have written the paragraph of his report which reported Buter's army as "bottled up and corked" between two rivers—the same being ascribed to the united intellects of staff officers Rawlings and Badeau. But it was a popular epigram, and Grant saw no reason to regret it for awhile. At last, when Butler, indomitable over all things, returned to Congress again, and Grant loomed up as the candidate for the Presidency, the latter began to comprehend that what seemed to be a smart thing in the moment of commission was a long thing in its influence and issues. more is this apparent now, when Butler has become a Manager of the Impeachment, and altogether the most formidable man as a poruled with a firm enough hand. I am of course in favor of giving them justice always; but they must not interfere with the rights of others, or disobey the laws."

The dubbing he gave Butler. He and Butler within the condition of the dubbing he gave Butler. He and Butler within the condition of the statement of the statement of the dubbing he gave Butler.
