INVOCATION TO SUMMER. IWe have to thank one of the many talented literary gentlemen of whom Pittsburgh can boast, for the following verses.] O. Summer! dear Summer! come back to us now.

Don't wait any longer for Spring:
Don't wait for the flowers to deek your warm brow.
But come on your samshiny wing.
For Spring has deceived us—with smiles on her face,
She beckoned old Winter away.
And tipped us her kisses, with loveliest grace.

But only to basely betray.

She called forth the young buds, and gladly they She called forth the young buds, and gladly they Cane.

Though shivering with Winter's cold blast:
They smiled through their ice-tears, but ah, cruck shame.

That smile of delight was their insk:

False Spring was their rain, she turned, in a trice, And bld hoary Winter come back;
He came, in the rain-storm, the snow and the ice, And blighted all life in his track.

O. Summer! dear Summer! then come to our aid.
Don't wait any longer for Spring:
We're nining for sunshing, nor want any shade: Don't wait any longer for Spring:
We're pining for sunshine, nor want any shade;
Come bring us warm weather—come, bring.
Let hills and vales feel thee, and mild waters flow,
Let breezes no chills on us fing;
We'll greet thee then, Summer, with hearts all
a-glow,
In-spite of the spitefulest Spring.
