Dear lady when I look at one
So lovely and so loved as you,
From whose young life has not yet gone.
The rose's blush, the morning's dew,
I sigh to think of all the years
Whose faded memories rise between
This and the time when, long ago,
I lost my heart to Sweet Sixteen.

Prate as they may of wiser thought,
Of cooler blood and steadier brain.
Of earnest wisdom, dearly bought
By anxious tare and saddening pain.
In all the years old Time can brigg.
In all the longest life has seen, There are no hopes, no joys, no loves, So sweet as those of Sweet Sixteen!

As roses fade and dews exhale;
Though glossies locks may turn to gray,
And fairest checks grow wan and pale;
Yet who can doubt those dearly loved,
It lands of mortal eye maseen
Beyond the stars, shall all regain
The angel hues of Sweet Slateen;
