It is not sufficient that a tew good families have purchased a machine of any one make, for this could be said of all of them.

A machine, to be perfectly satisfactory. A machine, to be perfectly satisfactory, should be adapted to every variety of sewing, the very finest as well as the heaviest. It should also be capable of doing its work without the unpleasant noise made by some machines. It should be simple in its construction, durable, and neat and ornamenstruction, durable, and neat and ornamental in its appearance. We know of no machine that combines all these points of excellence better than the New Noiseless Family Machine, manufactured by the Singer Company, and sold in this city by Mesers. Straw & Morton, corner of Penn and St. Clair streets. At all events, we would divise all the exemple this meaning. before purchasing any other.
