LETTERS FROM EUROPE-NO. 11. A Visit to the Metropolitan Tabernacie. [Correspondence of the Pittsburgh Gazette.]

LONDON, September, 1868. Being in London on Lord's day, the 80th of August, we went first of all, as nearly all strangers do, when in the city, to hear Mr. Spurgeon. Having read many of his ones, and having read many descriptions of the man and the character and style of his preaching, I had, very naturally, a strong desire to see and leave the man and the character and style of his preaching, I had, very naturally, a strong and old." Mr. Spurgeon is not a nervous sermons, especially his earlier published municants, is the largest in the world. regular course of study in either college or seminary, and by his industry and extra-ordinary ability, he has risen to a commanding and most influential position. His Tabernacle, which was opened for public worship in 1861, looks more like a Grecian Temple, in its exterior than a modern house of by six columns, and the building itself is one hundred and forty-five feet long, eightyone wide, and sixty-two high. The means of ingress and egress are admirable, there being ten wide doors, two on each side leading to the gallerles, and six in front opening into the first floor and leading to the first gallery. The interior of the building is finely constructed; plain, but neat, commodious and substantial. Its acoustic properties are good, and it is well adapted both for seeing and hearing the speaker. The interior is of oval form and has no right angles. The first floor is inclined, two deep galle-ries run round the whole building, which is somewhat in the style of a concert room, and is lighted by windows from above as well as by side windows. Above the first floor a platform about four and a half feet high is raised in which is the baptistery, on which stands the communion table, and where Mr. Spurgeon, his Elders and Dea. where Mr. Spurgeon; his Elders and Dea-cons, sit during the communion service. A flight of stairs of fifteen steps leads on either side from this platform to an-other which is on a level with the front edge of the floor of the first gallery. This is surmounted by a railing behind which Mr. Spurgeon stands when preaching, so that the first floor is many feet below him, the second gallery many feet above him, and he on a level with those occupying the front seats of the first collery. occupying the front seats of the first gallery. He has no pulpit; a small table with an inclined desk upon it supports the Bible, and having read his text he advances to the railing and speaks to the people below him, on a level with him, above him, behind on a level with him, above him, behind him, all around him. A man who would not be inspired to speak under such circumstances, and with such an immense congregation in sight of him, all eager to catch every word that falls from his lips, certainly could not be a true messenger of Christ to men. The occasion and the scenes, and above all the desire to save them who hear, above all the desire to save them who hear, must impart fervor and inspiration to the speaker. The hour for commencing public words. We went early; and passing though the gate that opens into the churchyard, a few paces brought us to be exceedingly well adapted to the ordinance of the product exported to the world except the Pacific, would be deemed to be exceedingly well adapted to the product exported to the product exp him, all around him. A man who would not be inspired to speak under such circumto a second gate between the cor-ner of the church and the side fence. Through these, one on each side, the members of the church are admitted by ticket. Handing a card, with name and address on it, to the officials who stand at the gate, we passed along, entered the building, ascended a flight of stairs to the first gallery, and were shown to seats by one of the gentlemanly deacons. Ten minutes before the time for commencing the service; the front doors were thrown open and the crowd in waiting outside poured in. In a few mo-ments every seat in the spacious edifice was occupied, and some, though not many, stood during the entire service. One of the deacons assured me that the Tabernacle will seat six thousand persons, and that there is standing room for one thousand more. Precisely at the time Mr. Spurgeon came on the in the development of their inexhaustable platform and began the services by an invo-cation. A hymn was then sung, in the singing of which the whole congregation joined. There is no organ, and no choir, that I saw. A precentor, who stood on the platform near Mr. Spurgeon, started the tune, which was each time named by Mr. Spurgeon himself. He "lined" the hymn, as the Scotch say. A stanza was sung and then the congregation paused while he read the next stanza, and so on to the close. It was a pleasing sight to see such a large congregation standing engaged in singing, and rapturous to hear so many voices raised in praise to the risen Saviour. The Scripture son was the 4th ch. of 2d Cor., on which, or on portions of which, Mr. S. commented as he read. His remarks were apt and welltimed. After prayer and the singing of another hymn, he announced that his text would be found in 1 Cor. 15 ch. 28 v. "I die daily." His subject was The Art of Dying Daily. I cannot give aven an anmuch space. Suffice it to say that the sermon was good, scriptural and impressive, but in nowise remarkable. I have heard as good sermons both before and since by ministers of whom the great world knows nothing. Mr. Spurgeon is original, he is imself, he is no copyist, and there is that bout him which attracts, and interests, and also impresses. He is wonderfully gifted; both nature and grace have done much for him, and you feel that you are listening to no ordinary man. A man who can draw together and hold for years such an immense congregation must be far above mediocrity. What is the secret of his power? What are the elements of his unparalleled popularity? Evidently no one thing. He combines many rare powers in a high degree. Let me set down my own estimate of the man, and state wherein I think his success lies. First, he is thoroughly converted, and wholly consecrated to his work as a minister of Christ. He has been renewed: he "has tasted the good word of God, and the power of the world to come;" and has a true knowledge of the things of Christ. To be saved conversion is necessary but to be a true minister a double conversion is necessary. This latter T believe Mr. Spurgeon has the knows what an and Spurgeon has He knows what sin and the cross are, and can rightly speak of them to others. A second element of Mr. Spurgeon's success and power is beyond all question his rotes. In forming my estimate of the man, that thought to mention this first, for his voice is the finest and most attractive I have ever heard. It is pleasant, melodious, magnificent. It is full, silvery, and possesses a peculiar charm. It attracts you from the first, and so distinct that, it is said, he can be easily heard by every person in the spacious building. To realize the full charm and sweet and the process of his voice, you must have resulted. No. 8 ST. CLAIR STREET ness of his voice, you must hear another read or speak during the same service. The superiority of Mr. Spurgeon's voice is then apparent. It is soft yet rich and full.

Again, during the earlier years of his ministry Mr. Spurgeon attracted public atten-tion by his digregard of the customs of the age. The gown, (worn by nearly all dis-senting, as well as Episcopatian ministers in Europe) the manuscript, the pulpit—Mr. S.—cared for mone of them. He came before the people with a warm heart, and spoke to them of things which they could understand in plain words, and in a familiar style. This, so new and unusual in England, attracted public notice. Further, he is an earnest man. His terrible earnestness conquers success. He speaks from the heart, and his words reach the heart. This gives him power over the people; and preaching, I had, very naturally, a strong desire to see and hear him. Mr. Spurgeon, though still a young man, has become the There is no violent gesticulation; he moves There is no violent gesticulation; he moves principal notability of London, and the Metropolitan Tabernacle, a widely known institution of London. He preaches to the quence in his sermons. Unlike Robert Hall largest congregation of any man in the world, and the church of which he is the pastor, height. He is seldom more eloquent or impassioned at one stage of his discourse than another. You are interested, but not care Twelve or fifteen years ago he came to London, a young man without name or prestige, and without having gone through work he is doing in London.

P. S. Since writing the above, I have heard Mr. Spurgeon for the third time. It was to day, September 15th, and in Liverpool. The occasion was the re-opening of a Baptist chapel, Rev. Hugh Stowell Brown, Pastor, which has been undergoing repairs. ple, in its exterior than a modern nouse of worship. In front there is a portice supported two thousand persons. Every seat was occupied and many stood. The congregation was admitted by ticket, and had we not The chapel is a large one, holding, it is said, been Americans, it is doubtful whether our friend would have got tickets for us, as all had been given out before our application was made. However, we got tickets to sit or stand, whichever we chose I suppose, in the aisle, but, better than our tickets called for, a good deacon gave us good seats.

The sermon of to-day was by far the best of the three I have heard Mr. Spurgeon deliver. It was a searching, stirring appeal to lukewarm christians. He preaches again to-night, but none of those who were present this morning are allowed to go tonight: The rush to hear him was wonderful. A collection was taken up for the benefit of his orphanage in London. Mr. Spurgeon has a College in London for preparing young men for the ministry, and also in course of erection, buildings in which orphan boys are to have a home and be edacated. His hands are full of work. God bless all his true and faithful servants.
