A married man named James Rumble was brought before Mayor Drum on Thursday evening, charged with one of the most fleudish acts in the calendar of crime. The information upon which he was arrested was made by Mr. Samuel Hough, a resident of the Fearth ward, Allegheny, who alleges that the accused brutally violated the perthat the accused brutalty violated the person of his niece, Jane Stebbins, a little girl aged about twelve years. The girl is an orphan, her father having been killed in the army, and her mother also dying a short time after the death of her father. Following the death of her parents, she was taken in charge by her oncie, who adopted her as one of his family. She is said to be a delicate and rather feeble child and the brutality which he sustained may result seriously. Her story, upon which the information is based. is in substance as follows: On Thursday af-ternoon, while the rest of the family were alsent, she was going about her usual du-ties when she was approached by Rumble, who, it seems, occupies with his wife a por-tion of the house, her uncle, with his fami-ly, ocupying the remainder. She alleges that Rumble followed her up stairs, first coaxing, then threatening, and finally accomplishing his designs by force. The little girl, it is stated, first related the circumstance to Mrs. Rumble, who immediately communicated it to Mr. Hough, ately communicated it to Mr. Hough, which led to the information, as stated, which led to the information, as stated. Rumble was soon after arrested and placed in the lock-up until yesterday, when a preliminary hearing was had in the case. CLEARANCE SALE

The Immense Stock of Dry Goods at J. W. Barker & Co.'s offered at Closing Out Sale-Great Bargains for Thirty Days-Prices Less than before the War. The semi-annual clearance sales which popular the great dry goods emporium of Messra, J. W. Barker & Co., No. 59 Market street, are very generally regarded in this end of the State as the hey-day for bargains and special occasion for the purchase of desirable goods at extremely low prices. In order to accommodate the vast trade exclusively monopolized by this house-and of which it is eminently deserving-Messrs. Barker & Co. are compelled to purchase at the opening of seasons immense stocks of goods in order that their customers will find proper selection and variety. These large quantities of goods, however, must be sold, for in the dry goods business no policy is more suicidal than that of carrying from one season to another any considerable portion of stock. After the first and heaviest run of trade, which usually sets in even in advance of the season, and when the orders have been generally supplied and business commences to subside, this experienced firm commence aronce the grand turning of stock on hand into money, or in other words inaugurate the semi-annual sales which open to purchasers such favorable fields for bargains. The object of the clearance sale will be appreciated by merchants engaged in any line of business where the articles handled are subject to the rigid rules of change and fashion. So great is the desire of prudent merchants who are engaged as largely in the trade as Messrs. Barker & Co. to turn themselves Messrs. Barker & Co. to turn themselves at the close of each season, that we once heard a dealer, with boundless experience, say that "it pays to close out the stock before a new season comes on, even if the goods have to be given away." Barker & Co. never go so far in their ideas on the chibiest as to actually distribute their goods. subject as to actually distribute their goods gratuitously to all comers, but they approach that point very closely. They do not take into consideration what the goods cost them. Neither do they anticipate or calculate how much more money they might realize by holding back the clearance and awaiting he slow order of things, dispose of nearly all in the usual routine of business. But looking at the magnitude of the stock of dry goods of all descriptions, cloaks, sacques, walking jackets, balmorals, blankets, fiannels and the thousand and one articles which go to make up their assortment and which crowd their The closing exercises of the Fall term of the Fittsburgh Female College, held in the College Chapel last evening, attracted quite a large audience. PROBABLE HOMICIDE.

Diarderous Street Row-A Man Terribly Butchered Several Persons Stabbed

Last night about twelve o'clock one of tne most bloody and horrible street fights which we have been called upon for a long time to record, took place in the vicinity of the Mansion House, Liberty street, the result of which will, in all probability, seal the doom of one of the participants, and consign one or more of the others to the scaffold or penitentiary. The circumstances of the affair, as near as we could learn at the late hour of its occurrence, are as follows: It seems that a ball had been in progress during the evening in the "Con-tinental" saloon, one of those sink-holes of iniquity with which our city is carsed, located in the rear of the Mansion House on Liberty street. The ball had been closed and the attendants were about separating when a difficulty occurred between a man named John McDonald and another man, whose name we failed to learn. McDonald it appears was in company with one of the female attendants, whose company had been previously solicited by the party with whom he had the difficulty. The two men, after wrangling a short time in words, by some means got out into the alley in the rear of the salcon, where alley in the rear of the salcon, where they commenced a fight.

The fight had not progressed far before others were attracted to the scene, and soon the row became general. Knives were drawn, pistols fired, bricks and stones sent flying through the air with a reckless disregard of anything and everything. The fighters gradually fought their way out from the alley and across Liberty street to the vicinity of Hand street, where it attracted the attention of Lieutenant Wilmot, who happened along that way and who immediately summoned the police. At the mediately summoned the police. At the one of them was lying in the gutter surrounded by about half a dozen ethers, who, with oaths and exclamations to "kill him," were doing all in their power by means of such weapons as villains usually carry to excute their design. Upon the approach of the police, the party fled with the exception of the man in the gutter, who was unable to do so, and another whom the police secured before he could get off. The two captured men were taken to the Mayor's tured men were taken to the Mayor's office, where they gave the names as John McDonald and John Boyle. McDonald, the man who had been lying in in the gutter, presented a spectacle of blood and wounds such as we have seldom seen. There was a long, deep gash across the right side of his face and temple, from which the blood flowed profusely, covering his whole person. Drs. Murdock and King were guickly summoned, and dressed the were quickly summoned, and dressed the wounds of the injured man. He had been hacked to pleces about the face and throat,

Pittsburgh Teachers' Institute.

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, the Fifth Session of the Pittsburgh Teachers' Institute held last evening in the hall of the Third Ward School building, was very largely attended and the proceedings were of much interest to all in at-

The Institute was called to order at 71 o'clock by Mr. Geo. J. Luckey, City Super-intendent. Mr. J. F. McClymonds opened the proceedings with prayer. Mr. Luckey then introduced Hon. S. P.

Wickersham, State Superintendent of the School Department, who delivered a practical and instructive address of about fifty-five minutes' length, in which he spoke of the improvements in the school system of the State, one evidence of this fact being this Institute, and another evidence wa the action of the Pittsburgh Board of Con trol in electing a City Superintendent. He was glad that they, in their selection, secured such an able and efficient teacher and school worker as the present incum-bent, and trusted they might ever be so fortunate. It had become an axiom among persons of experience in school affairs that no good public school system could be ormaintained without a Superin tendent. In most of the States where the school system was in practice nearly every city of ten thousand innabitants has its City Superintendent of Schools, and so well had it been found by trial to operate, that no city within his knowledge had ever gone back to the old method of manage-ment. In the course of his remarks on improvements, the speaker spoke of the im-provement in school buildings, which he considered a very gratifying sign. Reterence was made to the new school building in the Eleventh ward of Pittsburgh, which he characterized as one of the best buildings for the purpose he had ever examined. The speaker referred also to the present school census now being taken in the city, and stated that he intended to bring before the next Legislature the importance of taking such a census throughout the State. erence was made to the High School and its advantages, and upon this point the speaker dwelt at length. He was glad to hear of the project for a new building for the High school, and hoped it would be carried into execution. A Normal School in connection with the High School was, in the opinion of the speaker, one of its most important adjuncts, and should at once be established. A'Normal School prepared the best teachers, and good schools could not be maintained without good teachers, though everything else might be in perfect order. In speaking to teachers on their particuar work, the speaker observed that among lar work, the speaker observed that among the errors in practice was that of attempting to teach pupils things which they could not understand. Things which were above their years. The evils of this course were apparent to the most careless observer. Another error was in endeavoring to teach children too much of that which they did understand, which was nothing more than terrorming. "cramming" the mind with ideas and knowledge, which were of no avail, because the mind failed to receive any benefit from it. It was more than the mind could hold, and hence it lost all. Another error was in teaching from the wrong stand-point. The proper and natural way to commence teaching was by objects, not by abstract definitions, as was now generally pursued. Then, all teaching should be taught in a Then, all teaching should be taught in a logical manner. All knowedge had its logical connections, and should be taught accordingly. The teaching, above all other things, should be done by a natural connected method. Several examples of the evil effects of teaching by any different that were then developing very clear. method were given, developing very clearly the idea. Another error was in basing the instruction on a basis, which was altogether too narrow. It is better to instruct stead of confining their studies to a few, as at present practiced. The gentieman continued his remarks at igth in a practical and instructive manner, and closed amid great applause. On motion of Prof. Burit, a vote of thanks was tendered to Prof. Wickersham for his able and instructive address. After an intermission of five minutes, Prof. J. Davis took the stand, and delivered an address about ten minutes in length, on the subject of "Astronomy," illustrating his remarks by astronomical apparatus, his remarks by astronomical appar which had been invented by himself, Miss Seaver followed Mr. Davis, and addressed the Institute on school discipline.

Dividing her remarks into two divisions, the preventive and the curative, she took the ground that self-control in the teacher was one of the most essential elements in the prevention of school disorder. Courteousness was second only to self-control. The teacher should not only be courteous to the scholars, but also require courteousss among the scholars toward each other. Another requisite was to keep the scholars busy, and to do this the teacher must prepare herself for the day's work, study diligently the best way and means of keeping the scholars busy, and there will be but little difficulty on this point. Frequent recesses, singing and light gymnastic exercises, were all good in their places and could be used with much advantage in the prevention of school disorder by the judicious teacher. If some scholars, however, needed training, the best plan was to make the child feel that the teacher was interested in it and in sympathy with it. Another requisite was to keep the scholars interested in it and in sympathy with it.

The law of kindness and sympathy in this case would inevitably conquer. The lady took ground against corporal punishment except in extreme cases. In Syracuse, New York, corporal punishment was aban-doned in the schools, and the result was that but eighty-five scholars were expelled in seven months, while for a correspond-ing seven months, when corporal punish-ment was practiced, the suspensions amounted to four hundred.

The lady's remarks were very practical and attracted much attention from the teachers present. At the close of Miss Seaver's address the Institute adjourned until to-day at 9 o'clock A. M.

Singing School.

There is no accomplishment so pleasing as singing, and with the majority of people correct vocalization is second nature. Training is necessary, however, and few anderstand the proper system to adopt teaching or educating the voice. Prof. W. H. Slack, the well known and finished vocalist has been remarkably successful in imparting his skill and knowledge to pupils, and evidences of his success are on all sides. He will form a class for boys and girls at Davis' Hall, Water street, above the Collector's office, Allegheny, this afternoon at half past two o'clock, or popular basis of twenty lessons for one dol-lar. Parents should take advantage of the benefit offered by this school, and send their sons and daughters.

The Keystone Pottery.

The establishment of a queensware manafactory in this city by Messrs. S. M. Kier & Co., at 803 Liberty street, was an enterprise which was by many presumed to be a hazardous undertaking, but time has proved the wisdom of the firm. The quality of the ware manufactured is unsurpassed by any in the country, and it is coming into general use. In addition to the excellent quality of the ware there is another feeture which recommends it to mychasters. into through the tingit and the ware there is another jured by being beaten.

The row lasted some time, and it is surmised that most, if not all of the participants, carried off some bloody mark of the affray. At the late hour at which the affair happened we could not get the full particulars, but give what we could gather Unprecedented Success
