that in any form of language whatever it is proper to consider this decision an invasion of the rights of the House of Representatives. If it be not an invasion of the rights of the House, then we are the merest ornamental appendage to this proceeding of counting the votes that ever one body was made when dancing attendance on another.

Mr. SCHENCK alluded to the statement in the press of the Speaker's timely interposition of yesterday, in threaten-ing to arrest members of the House for disorder, when they expressed, somedisorder, when they expressed, somewhat too excitedly, their feelings of indignation, honestly felt by them, at this appearance of being trampled down and thrust out of the way. How came the Speaker to make that order? I thought we were in joint meeting of the two Houses, with the President of the Senate as the presiding officer. And with due as the presiding officer. And with due deference to the Speaker and his powers, I hold that the gavel was not properly in his hands. I hold that the order of arnis hands. I hold that the order of arrest, unless under some general claim as a peace officer, whose jurisdiction extends over the United States, ought not to have threatened us, and I can only account for the Speaker's doing so by supposing that, like many of us, he was excited by the annual confusion and excited by the unusual confusion and warm feeling of the occasion.

Speaker COLFAX, (from his place on the flow)

the floor)-Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. SCHENCK.—Certainly.

Mr. SCHENCK.—I did not intend to participate any further in the discussion, having stated my views to the House last evening, unless my official conduct was arraigned, as it is now by the gentleman from Ohio. The Speaker of the House feels that it is the right of every Representative to arraign him, if he dis. House leas that it is the right of every Representative to arraign him, if he disagrees with him as to the performance of his duty. In the case alluded to the Speaker performed his duty, and would have been described if he had not real have been derelict if he had not performed it. He would have been subject to the censure of the House if he had not interposed, at the time he did. to check the scene that was then transpiring.

The Speaker read from the 22d rule:

"It shall be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to attend the House in its sitting, and to aid the enforcement of order under the direction of the Speaker."

The gentleman from Ohio, continued derelict if he had not per-der the direction of the Speaker."

sisted that the House of Representatives, under the Constitution, was in session in this half-yesterday. It was a House of Representatives. There was a Speaker. The twenty-second rule requires that the Speaker shall sit at the lace of authority.

Mr. Butler rose in his place.

Mr. COLFAX—I do not yield to the centleman from Massachusetts. I have gentleman from Massachusetts. my colloquy with the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BUTLER—I did not ask you, sir.

Mr. COLFAX—The Speaker is to sit by the side of the presiding officer, but he is no less the Speaker of the House at the time. He is charged with the maintenance of order when the House is in senance of order when the House is in session. This rule is mandatory. If there was no House of Representatives yesterday, then the Speaker exceeded his authority. If there was a House of Representations of the second services when the second services was a services and the second services and the second services are services as the second services are services are services as the second Representatives here, then he performed his duty, endeavoring to command order that had been disregarded by the refusal to obey the order of him who was pre ding over the Joint Convention. The Constitution states distinctly, in article 12th, that the President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, open the certificates. There must be a House of Representatives there. There was a Speaker there. There was a Sergeant-Speaker there. There was a Sergement at Arms there. They were not cy-phers. They had duties devolving upon them. Let me ask forther: If dis-upon them. Let me ask forther if disorder in the Joint Convention exists, who is to perform the daty of restoring order? If the President of the Senate had ordered the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate to enforce rules of order on the members of the House of Representatives, the excitement would have been re-doubled; it would have been said he had to order his Sergeant-at-Arms to enforce order upon members of the House in their own hall. But under the twenty-second rule there was an officer to enforce order, and if he shrinks from the performance of his duty, for that he is sucject, as for all his acts, to the censure of the House.

Mr. SCHENCK—I have not the slightest idea of proposing the censure of the Speaker. I think he was excited like the rest of us.

Mr. COLFAX said he was not.

Mr. SCHENCK—There is only a differ-Mr. SCHENCK—There is only a ence of opinion about that. I thought I might be acquitted of any intent to armight be acquitted of any intent to armight the motives of the might be acquitted of any intensite arraign or impugn the motives of the Speaker. He ought to know I have no such feeling and no such purpose. I have too much respect and regard for him to think ill of him. If there be any issue between him and myself, it is of issue between him and myself, it is of his seeking. I simply, as a question of law, say, when the House of Representatives in here the second services in here. tives is here in joint meeting with the Senate, it is provided that, the President of the Senate shall pre over the joint meeting, and it is therefore the Senate that is here, and not the House of Representatives, as such, that is here, but a body composed conjointly of the two branches. And when the Speaker, out of proper respect, is assigned to a place alongside the President of the Senate, it is just the same as when the Senators are assigned their places on the right of the Chair, and as the tellers the right of the thair, and as the tellers are told where they are to take their seats, and all else that is to give diguity to the occasion. That is the regulation of the surroundings. But as it regards the legal right to preside and keep order, it is not a double-headed monster, but a body with one head, and for the time being the President of the Senate.

Now, I quote the Speaker's own decision yesterday on the point of order. The Speaker says: "A reply to that question would involve a discussion of question would involve a discussion of the questions properly transpiring in the Joint Convention of the two houses, over which the Speaker of this House has no power." That is the latest interpreta-tion that I have upon the law on the sub-lect. It was given to me vesterday. I ject. It was given to me yesterday. I agree that the presiding officer of the Joint Convention was the man to do it.

We are obliged to omit the remainder of the report of the House proceedings. Mr. Colfax replied at considerable length, to Mr. Schenck, who also made another to Mr. Schenck, who also made another speech, adhering to the position he had taken. Mr. Butler made a vigorous reply to the attack upon him by Mr. Bingham, and the discussion continued up to the hour of recess. He was arrested and held for a hearing.

The Final End .- We are authorized by the President of the '.dventists' Association, to announce z correction of our yesterday's statement that the end of all things mundane was to be expected on the 10th of July next. In point of fact, no precise date has yet been fixed for the catastrophe, which may be even nearer than first stated. Readers will govern themselves accordingly.

Correction .- Mr. D. M. Parks, the shoe merchant who was prosecuted before Alderman Lynch, yesterday, for an alleged selling of boots that were not mates, explains that the feet of the purchaser were not mates, one being longer than the other, and that after the boots had been worn four or five days the request to change them was made. We feel sure that Mr. Parks is not to blame in the transaction.

Sales of Real Estate.-Yesterday Capt H. B. Smithson, the well known auctioneer of 55 and 57 Fifth avenue, sold the residence of Capt. C. Brannon, on Centre avenue, for the sum of $15,000. Harry Oliver, Esq., was the purchaser. Also, resold at private sale that two-story brick house No. 61 Congress street, for the sum of $5,500. Parties having property to dispose of can at once see in whose hands to place it.

The Soho Fire.—Mr. Ferdinand Kaufield, of the firm of Adams, Powers & Co., proprietors of the glass works which consumed by fire, an account of which we published yesterday, made information before the Mayor, charging three boys with having set the establishment on fire. The boys were arrested by officers McCready and Moon, and after a hearing before His Honor, the Mayor, were discharged, there being no evidence against them.

Referred to the Street Committee. Mr. J. C. Patterson, a communication accompanied by the report of W. Milnor Roberts, relative to the Water Works in Pittsburgh. Referred to the Water Comnittee.

Mr. Reiter, a petition for the change of the grade on Walker street. Referred to the Committee on Surveys. Mr. Myler presented a communication from the City Engineer relative to the adoption of different qualities of pipe for sewers, as follows:

John A. Myler. Esq., Chairman Sewerage Commission:
DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter asking my judgment as to the best kind of pipe for sewer purposes, and of the relative merits of the cement and vitrified pipe, I would state that the pipe that has been most generally adopted and approved is the vitrified clay pipe. This pipe, when properly manufactured, I believe to be the best adapted for such purposes.

The efficiency of pipe depends on the smoothness of the interior surface, on the correctness of the joints, and on the the correctness of the joints, and on the sweep of the portions where changes of direction are made in the line of sewer. There is no pipe that surpasses or equals the vitrified in the particular of smoothness of surface. This pipe has the merit, too of having its durability thoroughly tested by long use. The pipe, in the most approved form, is made with sleeve or collar joint. This method of connecting gives a better joint and bed connecting gives a better joint and bed for the pipe and a smoother surface in-side, and facilitates handling and adjusting in the trench.

The portions of the pipe made for making changes in direction of the line, or for connections with lateral sewers, are curved sections of a radius of eight or ten feet, and the junction pieces are formed in the pipes at a sharp angle with its line. A late improvement in pipe joints, I am informed, makes the joint piece son two feet long in halves, with rebates on ends in which the pipe ends rest, thus giving an opportunity to make the joint flush and to smooth down the cement with which the joint is luted.

The internal glazing of vitrified pipe

The internal glazing of virtued pipe effectually protects it against the action of any substances carried in the sewage. Its strength is found to be sufficient even for calibers of eighteen or twenty inches. Cement pipe is used in some cities but not to the extent of the vitrified. Its introduction dates so recently compared with the other that but little can be said of it in the light of experience. this pipe could not be made to answer the purpose and to be made of the required strength for any pressure it may be subjected to.

An objection to its use in some situations is, that sawage matter containing tions is, that sewage matter containing acid will soon desiroy the pipe.

I am of the opinion that if the cement will be personally manufactured, with the pipe is properly manufactured with the best cement and clean sharp sand, thoroughly incorporated, it can be made to whatever material the pipe is made of, to act efficiently it must be of correct form throughout, and with joints that will give the smoothest water way, and will give the smoothest water way, and with connections that will offer the least with connections that will offer the least resistance to the implinging current. The curved sections should in no case be of less than eight feet radius, and ten or twelve would do better. All slants or junctions should make a small angle with the line of current.

with the line of current.

Were these points as carefully studied and as faithfully carried out in the manufacture of cement pipe as in that of vitrified, many of the objectionable features to the use of the former would be removed.

be removed.
Cement pipes of sizes over twelve inches should be oviform in section, and the invert should be reinforced with what is invert should be reiniorced with what is termed a shoe, to give strength and a better bearing. The oviform section will resist better the unequal vertical pressure—fifteen inch pipe, as far as I can learn, is about as large as is used much above that its reliability cannot always be depended on. Nor do I think it would be judicious to use it above fifit would be judicious to use it above anteen inches until the manufacturers can insure more uniformity in the material, and until there is more certain methods of detecting inferior pipe. The point that works most to the disadvantage of the point is the difficulty of detecting imthis pipe is the difficulty of detecting im perfections in the pipe, and of telling when inferior [qualities of cement are

I believe that if the cement pipe in its nechanical points of manufacture is made equal to the vitrified, and the material of which it is made is properly selected and used, that there can be no objection to it for sewers, except of positions where it could be affected by acids. where it could be affected by acids. Respectfully, CHARLES DAVIS.
