PITTSBURGH MARKETS.

OFFICE OF PITTSBURGH GAZETTE

WEDNESDAY, March 10, 1869. The general markets have been exceedingly quiet and dull thus far this week and the volume of business in the aggregate light. We are in hopes, however, that with a speedy resumption of navigation, of which there is every appearance at this writing, there will be a decided improvement in all branches of trade, and that the dullness and depression which have so long prevailed, will be made to give place to that activity and bouyancy which should pervade business circles at this season, of the year. The markets, in a general, way are devoid of anything that is really new or important, and the most noticable feature we have to report is that almost everything is depreciating in value, gradually but
