ACADEMY OF MUSIC.-Deborah. or Leah, as it has been anglicised, is a character hardly suited to the powers of Miss Janauschek. She does it well, but she shows off her wonderful genius betas Elizabeth or Medea. Yet last night she achieved a magnificent and deserved success. From beginning to end she was successful. Her reading was superb, her poses graceful, sometimes grand, and her drapery artistic; perhaps there was a little too much attention to this, as we sometimes fancied that the clothing of the wretched Jewess would imped, her the wretened Jewess would imped, aer progress. As compared with Miss Bate-man's rendition of the character, we think that of the German actress is perhaps inferior; the former was all fee and but few eyes were dry in the house the night we saw her, whilst last night, the night we saw her, which has high, although the audienc was almost entirely an appreciative one, we saw no one weeping, yet all were evidently impressed with the power and finish of the acting; and Miss Bateman herself could have nitrated nothing more pathetic than have uttered nothing more pathetic have uttered nothing more patnetic than the wild dispairing cry of "Joseph!
