Distressing Accident.—Little Boy Killed.

Yesterday evening, about twenty minutes to five o'clock, a painful accident occurred in Allegheny, resulting in the almost instant death of Joseph Albrecht, a lad aged about ten years, eldest son of Joseph Albrecht, Jr., the well known shoe dealer.

The little fellow, in company with a younger brother, was playing around the platform at the Freight Depot of the Western Pennsylvania Railroad, in the rear of the Catholic Church, Anderson street.

At the time a number of freight cars were standing on the track alongside the platform, which were being coupled together with considerable force, causing those in the rear to be forced backward.

At this instant the men heard a scream, and upon looking back, saw one of the boys screaming and pushing against the train to move on.

Running to the place, they discovered the oldest boy crushed between the "bumper block" placed at the end of the track.

The little victim was quickly extricated, but never opened his eyes and ceased to breathe in about two minutes afterwards.

A physician was called from the mouth and nose, but when examined for a few minutes no signs of injury were to be seen.

A black spot on his forehead, and the greatest force seems to have been felt there. He was removed to the residence of his father, at the corner of Fifth and Avery street, Fourth ward.

The officers of the train say they never crushed between the bumper of a freight car and forward between the "bumper block" and the car in play, and had done so several times before the accident occurred.

The coroner has been retained to hold an inquest on the remains to-day.

Mrs. Barclay's Lecture. In announcing the lecture of this lady for last night our types were so misused as to fall entirely of our object.

Mrs. Barclay delivered her first lecture at the Sixth U. P. Church, (Dr. A. D. Clarke's), in the Fifth ward, Allegheny, on Monday evening last.

Her lecture was well received, and her course of lectures will be continued at the same place every evening of the present week.

Mrs. Barclay is a lady of imposing presence, of many and varied attainments, has a chaste and eloquent diction, and commands an audience as well as speaks with her usual grace and ability.

In her lecture she treated of "How to keep it," and treated with her special ability and in a way so practical and useful to her audience.

Her presence, their sense of the great merit of the accomplished lecturer, and thus induce her to re-visit the city on some future occasion.

Some time since, as our readers will remember, the leather store of Messrs. Spangler & Graham, Allegheny Diamond, was robbed of a considerable quantity of leather.

A part of the property was found in an alley in the rear of the establishment the next morning.
