The activity and excitement in Wall street, which has prevailed with scarcely an interruption since Monday, was succeeded by a perfect calm in all departments this afternoon. There was an entire absence of sensational or excit-ing rumors, and the leading "bulls" and "bears" left the street at an early hour, after an exhaustive struggle. The general markets are dull and somewhat neglected, the demand for alsomewhat neglected, the demand for almost everything being light and restricted mainly to supplying immediate wants, while in regard to values, there are no important changes, with the exception that prices generally are tending downward. PETROLEUM MARKET. OFFICE OF PITTSBURGH GAZETTE,

SATURDAY, May 22, 1869. REVIEW FOR THE WEEK. There has been considerable excitement in the oil market during the week which has just closed, and compared with last week prices of both Crude and Refined are lower. The sales, however, fall below those of last week, which may be accounted for in the fact that buyers generally are holding off in expectation of Crude going lower, and as a general thing refiners are not disposed to sell refined until they have first bought the crude. While the indications point very forcibly to lower figures for crude, it responds very slowly, and while refined, particularly for future deliveries, has declined materially, crude has not decorated one through the crude of a crute figure.

wiew a number of refineries uave re-sumed operations and it is expected that sumed operations and it is expected that the number will be still further in-creased next week. The reduction in freights has infused new life and anima-tion into the business, and upon the whole the market presents a more hopeful and healiby appearance than it has for several months. As will be seen, for several months. As will be seen, the shipments east were much larger than for any preceding week for some time, and it is probable that the exports next week will be larger than during the one which has just closed. There are still some drawbacks in the way, but these will doubtless soon be obviated and there is no good reason to believe why Pittsburgh should not continue to be the great oil manufacturing centre of this country. Another noticeable and very important feature apparent, is a determination on the part of both manufacturers and dealers to discountenance anything of a wild and speculative character, to adhere as closely as possible to a legitimate business, to dis-
