The National Economic Museum. Some years since Prof. Townsend Glover, Entomologist of the Agricultural Department, conceived the idea of creating a National Economic Museum, and a collection of insects, birds, grains, grasses, wax impressions of perishable fruits, specimens of minerals, fibres, &c., &c., was the result. Besides forming this collection, Prof. Glover has inaugurated a system of communication with scientific men in all parts of the world for the purpose of obtaining, by interchange, the results of their experience and observa-

The object of this museum is not to establish a Government curiosity shop, but, on the contrary, it is for the purpose of general utility. It is arranged in three grand divisions, as follows: 1. The general division, containing the history of every product of the United States.

2. A case to each State to contain samples of its products. 3. Economic-to show what different materials can be manufactured from the mineral, vegetable and animal productions of the United States.

The museum is so arranged that when inquiries are made by a visitor or by letter, a reference to samples of the product, material or insect, and from them to the library, will show at once all that is known in reference to it. For example: A few days since a tobacco grower called to com-plain that a peculiar insect injured his plant. He was shown plates exhibiting every insect that infests that product, and immediately singled the number, recognizing at once as the depredator. He was then shown the insect in all its different degrees of development, from the larvæ to full growth, and instructed how to kill it. Another applied to ascertain whether a certain insect he had noticed in large numbers in his vineyards was prejudicial to the grapevine. A similar reference and recognition proved it perfectly harm-less. Another inquires whether a certain bird injures his crop. Reference to the museum showed it to be insectivorous, and settled the question at once. In one show-case Pennsylvania fruit, In one show-case Pennsylvania fruit, haps be generally known that the fashion grain, mining, manufacturing and other or rather the deformity was carried to interests are represented. Petroleum, in such a length of absurdity, that during its crude state, and different stages of the fall of that year a woman named manufacture into refined oil, parafine, Clarke absolutely attempted to open a aniline colors, and everything that can be made from it. Glass tubes show the different strata through which it is necessary to bore to reach petroleum in the different sections of the country, and give experience of the well-borers, pearing with a first-class bend on the pearing with a first-class bend on the month of the well-borers, pearing with a first-class bend on the pearing with a first-class bend on the month of the well-borers. showing also the oil-bearing sand stones and other minerals. In fact, a clearer ides of the importance and magnitude of the coal and coal oil interest can be obtained by an examination of this case than in any other way.

In brief, the design of the Museum is in accordance with the nation's present necessity. Any one emigrating from a foreign land, or from one portion of the Union to another, can at once learn what products are best adapted to their contemplated homes, and the information thus imparted is well calculated to increase the productive power of the nation.

The Right Sort of Agitation. The New York Examiner and Chronicle, a leading and very influential organ of the Baptist denomination, closes a strong article on the question of politics and temperance, as follows: The temperance question is an emi-nently practical one. The rayages of in-temperance, in all their ghastly horror, confront the eye and sicken the heart on temperance, in all their ghastly horror, confront the eye and sicken the heart on every hand. But it is one of those evils that cannot be legislated out of existence, holds the folds of a plate mantle. Beunless behind the legislation lies a vast, controlling moral sentiment, bearing it up and giving it force. Before the temperance men of this State can hope for the passage and execution—the latter is the more difficult task of the two-of thorough prohibitory laws, such a sentiment must be created. It can be created only by persistent, well-directed, prayerful sork. There is no legislative "short cut" to reforms that take hold of men's lives and habits. Dabbling in politics, bargaining with party schemers, grasping at the "bal-ance of power," but fritter away the strength that is all needed to forward the grand result. Whenever, and only when, great need now is for a Christian temper-

The French Pestal System. In the days of Louis XI, it was decreed by this sainted monarch, that the posto-fice should only carry letters after first having read them. With Sir James Graham this custom vanished. Under Louis XV, there was the "Black Cabinet," or the office for the Secrets of Letters, where the King and his courtiers found a pastime in reading what was confided to the post. Louis XVI, of unhappy memory, abolished this scandal in 1775. At the pe riod of the Revolution there were but 1219 post-offices in France; in 1839, 1799; at present there are about 66,000 More than 84,000 boxes are emptied of their letters several times per day. In 1867, the French Postoffice distributed 722,000,000 of letters, journals, etc. Of this mass, 342,000,000 were letters proper; 4,000,000 ditto, but registered; 116,000, 800 official and "notices;" 305,000,000 journals of every nature; and 5,000,000 containing money, jewelry, postoffice orders, etc., the latter representing a sum of $6,000,000 of francs. Between the Central Office; and the various railway termini, 260 large sacks of newspapers and book-post matter are daily dispatched.

About 1,000 letters daily received, illegible at first sight. These are sent to the "Blind Man" (Vaneugle) the deci-pher, who generally sees his way. Two millions of letters are each year disposed of in the Dead Letter Office. They are destroyed by degrees-after due examination-that their contents are unimport ant. The French postal service is very complete-its officers are men of great intelligence. There are 38,500 employes in the several departments and out-sta tions. The revenue is estimated at 450, 000,000 of francs, giving a net gain to the treasury of 90,000,000.

Ye Grecian Bend and its Modus Operandi Our nineteenth century New York belle is more than ever pads and patent heavers. She is to be regarded not only as respects her bust, but as respects her bender. The origin of the term Grecian, from the erroneous idea that the Greek antique statuesque models of beauty inclined considerably from the perpendicular, and the origin of the bend itself at Saratoga in 1868, on the persons of two sisters of Fifth avenue extraction, are too well known to require more than mere mention in this place; but it may not perschool for instruction in the modus operands of the ridiculous position; that young girls practiced the Grecian bend street; and that an apparatus was invented by one female fool, and worn by hundreds of her silly kidney, by which apparatus, consisting of a strap around the waist, drawn tight from the shoulders in front a certain stoop was given to the body, and the bend could be bended with certainty and precision. This apparatus cost three dollars, and came into pretty exten-

Discovery of Ancient Roman Relies. A discovery of ancient Roman relications was recently made at Ofen, in Austria, consisting of a stone coffin, bearing the following inscription: "D. M. Other bankers have estimated that United States bonds to the full amount of thirty or forty millions of dollars were sent from London to Frankfort alone. Beyond all doubt, the English have paid dearly for the extravagant interpretation they chose to put on recent events.
