THE AWAITING. A FRAGMENT FROM "DIR BRWALTUNG"

Po I not heat the gate turning? Was it the latch that then fell? No! the zephyr murmurs yearning Through this quiet poplar deli.

Silence! the hedge-row was parted, ust'ing while one through it crept. No a frightened biri then darted From the copse, and onward swept. A voice with the still air is blending, ftly, in whispers fond? No! the circling swan is sending. Ripples o'er the sliver poud.

Hear I not feet lightly moving Over the grave: strewn path? No! the falling fruit is proving Ripeness from the weight it hath.

Do I not see a white shimm'ring. bbining with six's sheeny fall? No! the pliar the re is glimm'ring 'Gainst the shadowed yewen walk

And soft, while from heaven's clearness; The moments all happy descend, Nigh she came, unseen in ner rearness, And wakened with kisses her ifiend.
