Lossing, with several hundred engravings on wood, by Lossing and Barrit, chiefly from original sketches by the author. Published by Harper and Brothers, New York. Few American authors received more substantial evidence of popular favor than MR. Lossing, at the time his "Pictorial Field-Book of the Revolution" was published. The author showed Singular ability in the construction of the important features of that great historical event. Rare discrimination was also shown in the grouping of the facts and incidents of that remarkable period. Disclosing the laws of conjugal selections, and showing who may and who may not marry. By S. R. Wells, anthor of "New Physiog-omy," editor of the Phrenological Journal, etc. Published by Samuel R. Wells, New York. Works of this character are not expected to be perfect, as the question of marriage and its relations are viewed from different stand points. This work contains however much that is commendable, indeed it is an excellent compendium of historical facts on this subject, and will save readers much labor from seeking from various sources. There is also much practical and sensible knowledge communicated on different topics relating to wedlock, that are worthy to be observed. Many will differ with the author on some points, especially so far as relates to phrenology and physiology, though the views of the author are not pressed, neither are his religious opinions. ASPASIA. By C. Hollland. Published by J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia. The plain matter of fact style of this work will impress the reader at the outset. There is very little effort to be sensational, indeed a little vein of this stamp might help it. The story itself is of a domestic type, in which the lights and shades of married life are wrought out under a cloud of trials and hindrances. Its crowning virtue however, aside from the harsh style of the day, is the fine vein of religious sentiment running through it. This fact will lead many persons to read it. The discipline of this farmer's daughter was severe, and the result finally , was to her an advantage in her social relations.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF TEACHING. The Teacher, the Pupil, the School. By Nathaniel Sands: Published by Har-per & Brothers, New York.

Rarely have we found so much sensible information compressed in a work of sixty pages. Mr. Sands deals with these questions in plain words, and his views are worthy of thoughtful consideration. The first part treats of the relation of teachers and training, in which the office allow. of teacher is regarded as one that should be occupied by the best and purest persons, that education is absorption, and pupils should have help according to their ability to understand what they are taught. The second discourses of teaching and training, and the third to the school in general. Mr. Sands very properly argues only had reference to the cure of warts.
