HOOSAC TUNNEL—History and Progress of the Work.

A correspondent of the Titusville Herald furnishes the following interesting sketch of a visit to the Hoosac tunnel. He says: Don an old oil suit—cover your intellectual brow with a rubber cap—pendant from which an ample cape descends gracefully over your symmetrical shoulders—insert a blazing miner's lamp into the frontpiece of the cap aforesaid, jump on the platform of a machine similar in some respects to the elevator of a first-class hotel—give the signal, and down you drop into a dismal shaft.

Eighty thousand tons of coal were sold at auction to-day at the annexed prices: Lump $6.12 @ 70; Steamer $6.40 @ 65.25; Grate $6.00 @ 70; Chestnut $6.50 @ 60. Most of the lump sold at $6.15, while only 200 tons of stove brought $7.75, and most of the lot of 25,000 tons of stove went at $7.42 @ 74.

The tunnel is designed to shorten the distance from Troy to Boston, in order to enable the latter to compete with New York for the through traffic of the great West. The incipient steps were taken twenty years ago, and the undertaking has brought the heavy contracting firms to insolvency.

Eleven years ago it was taken hold of by the State of Massachusetts, and that Commonwealth has sunk nearly five millions of dollars in getting into the mountain only 5,800 feet at the east side and 4,500 feet at the west end.

FRAULEN TINNE, whose death was chronicled Saturday, has been engaged for several years in explorations of Africa, undertaken at her own expense.

She started from Tripoli on the 25th of January of the present year, and arrived at Moorook, in Fezzan, after a journey of about two months duration. She traveled leisurely, her caravan consisting of more than fifty persons and seventy camels. All her followers, with one exception, were either Arabs or negroes, and she herself dressed like an Arab lady.

She was locked upon by the Arabs with the greatest respect, and they called her "Bent-er-Rey," that is Queen's Daughter. Her long sojourn and travels in the Orient produced a total abhorrence of European habits, and she became embittered against everything European.
