Mr. Swift opposed the resolution on the ground that if carried out impartially, teachers would be required for nearly every language on the face of the globe, of which the American people were composed. America had nothing to do with such a matter, all they had to do was to educate the pupils of the schools in the common language of the nation.

Mr. Beckart thought the Board in Algebray City had nothing to do with the Chinese or any such people, but they had to do something for the large German population of the city. He ventured a wager that if the question were the voters would decide affirmatively.
