norror which the mere suspicion of such an enormity at once arouses, but examine for a moment the facilities for incendiarism afforded by the peculiar situation. George Morgan swore that he believed the fire began at the mouth of the tunnel, or a little below it. The tunnel reterred to affords the best possible cover for incendiary operations. Beginning under the lower side of the breaker, it ran under that building and opened into the shaft at a point about forty teet below the surface. The part of the shaft into ot the hoisting way. which was continually traversed by the carriage, frequently with men aboard, and in which any suspicious appearance would almost certainly have been noticed. The tunnel opened into the air shaft, or upcast, by a wooden door. This point in the air shaft, forty feet beneath the surface, was perfectly screened from observation. It was up the air shaft that the fire came, and it came with the speed and force of an explosion, bursting into the engine house, as the engineer swore, with the puff of an explosion of loose powder. This explosive character of the flame is partly accounted for by the strength of the draft in the air shaft; but the use of the quantity of highly inflammable materials at the mouth of the tunnel would effect. What is more easy than to enter the tunnel, say at daybreak, charge its mouth and the brettice opposite with a quantity of become or other inflamma. quantity of kerosene or other inflammawith it, light the fuse, escape unnoticed and be miles away before the catastrophe came? The fuse and a magazine would be most effectually concealed while the former was burning. It is a dreaded former was burning. It is a dreadful thing to feel compelled to advocate such a theory; but is any other possible? Can it be conceived that such a conflagration, if occurring from any socidental cause if occurring from any accidental cause, or at the bottom of the shaft, could have escaped the notice of men passing up and down the shaft only fifteen minutes before the flames burst from its mouth? Was not the mouth of the tunnel the only point opposite the burned part of the brettice at hich fire could have been communicated? Was it not impossible for any fire to accidentally come from the tunnel? In brief, is not the theory of incendiarism possible, and all others impossible?

In reaching this conclusion we need days are fast passing away, but may God not take into account the reports about spare me to see the President. The Pernicious Influence of Biron's

We like the tone of this extract from a recent letter by James Parton defending Mrs. H. B. Stowe. He says with great force: Nor is it true, as we have frequently been informed of late, that Byron's influence in the world is a thing of the past, Except Shakespeare, no poet who is not living sella so many copies per annum in the United States as Byron. Bukespeare, Byron, and Scott are chief among the "staple" poets of the book trade. But Byron is more than a poet to trade. But by on is more than a poet to the young men of this generation—he is an influence. His power to do evil is such that any one who can justly and properly diminish his prestize renders a service to morality.

Let us bring this view of the subject home to ourselves. A veteran journalist of the city of New York is accustomed to say that he can count twenty three young men connected with the Press or with litefature, in the three cities of New York, Boston and Philadelphia, who, during the last fifteen years, have destroyed themselves by the nasty vices. I might say; the Bryonic vices. From the many I mucht have many I myself have known of, I should suppose that he is within the truth in putting the number of these lamentable the French coast, where the cable was suicides at twenty three.
